Frost, Charles S. Papers, 1873-1913. Watkins, Schuyler Co., N. Y. 216 items. Sketch.

Charles S. Frost was a leading citizen of Watkins, N. Y., where he was proprietor of a general merchandise store and also owned and operated the Glen Park Hotel. The majority of the papers are purely business letters, mostly written by manufacturing companies and wholesale dealers engaged in extending an outlet for their wares to retail dealers. Since this was a community store for general merchandise, there is scarcely any limit to the number and variety of articles described, and the letters are often accompanied by printed lists with both wholesale and retail prices. This is especially true for the period from 1880 to 1908.

But aside from this there appear other items of a more general interest. In a letter of April 7, 1899, Glen Frost, connected with the State Senate at Albany, writes to his father, C. S. Frost, concerning some undesignated legislation proposed by the latter, that there was prejudice against Negroes attending the same functions with whites, expressed by the chairman of the committee to which the bill had been assigned.

In another letter of Oct. 26, 1899, Benj. B. Odell, Chairman of the Republican State Committee of New York, urges C. S. Frost to do all he can to return the representative from his county to the Assembly in the coming election. He claims that in New York City various crimes against the elective franchise had been perpetrated, and that a Republican legislature would be more effective in remedying this evil.

Journals of Daniel A. Frost, a merchant at Wilmington, N.C., and later a merchant and boardinghouse keeper in New York City, and finally a farmer at Poughkeepsie, N.Y.. The journals are concerned chiefly with personal matters - Frost's business affairs and his social and religious activities. Some information is given on social life and customs in N.C., N.Y., and Connecticut; on camp meetings in N.C. and N.Y.; on the fortification of Brooklyn, N.Y., during the War of 1812; on the Presbyterian church in N.Y.; and on elections during the 1830's in N.Y. Mention is made of excellent Fourth of July speeches by Edwin Jay Osborne and Langdon Cheves at Wilmington, N.C., and Charleston, S.C., in 1808 and 1810, respectively. Excellent descriptions of Albany and Waterford, N.Y., and Newark, N.J., are included. A good account is given of farm life in N.Y.. The last volume of the journals is comprised of records of the Frost boardinghouse in New York City.

Milton Frost was a preacher of undetermined denomination. His letters are filled with religious exhortations and are extremely uninformative.

His brother William moved to Texas and wrote several enthusiastic letters about living conditions there.

There is one fairly interesting letter from Milton's sister, Rebecca, written from Greensboro Female College, Sept. 11, 1847.

Froude, James Anthony. Papers. London, Eng.

James A. Froude (1818-1894) was a British historian. He became the chief disciple of Thomas Carlyle and his literary executor. Between 1860 and 1874 he edited Fraser's Magazine.

In a letter to Edwin DeLeon, an American diplomat and author, he wrote as follows: "I shall be very glad of your assistance in Fraser. Especially I shall be glad to hear what you have to say about the Southern States. [General] Imboden told me that in ten years the South & West will be combined to force New England to remain in the Union. Is that likely. [sic] Any way you will have to take the conceit out of New England and I should like to know how that will be done."

This letter bears only the date June 11. In 1862 DeLeon's pamphlet by the title of La Vérité sur les Etats Confédérés d'Amérique was published in Paris. Not until 1863 was Imboden made a brigadier general in the Confederate Army.

2 items added, 1-5-63. On January 12, 1876 (?), Froude writes to Fanny Kingsley, wife of the late Charles Kingsley, British author. Froude will visit her soon and will try to help with her unspecified project. He recalls distinctly the year 1849, but he never had any letters on serious subjects - "much talk-but no correspondence." Froude then comments on the death of his second wife and expresses sympathy to Mrs. Kingsley on the loss of her husband in 1875.

On November 24, _____, Froude writes to Lady Augusta Stanley, wife of Arthur Penrhyn Stanley, Dean of Westminster. Froude will soon visit Stanley and has an article to show him. Froude also remarks that he is "in the middle of the chapter which closes in the Hall at Fothering-gay."

2 items added, 9-12-67. On July 13, 1877, Froude wrote to Lieut. General John Jarvis Bisset and stated his opinion on governing

South Africa.

A letter dated only October 23 has a watermark of 1890. It is Froude's statement against having a literary authority in Britain such as the French Academy.

1 item added, 12-10-70: Froude's response, dated only March 10, to an invitation from a Mrs. Lowther. His current travels were noted.

1 item added, 5-8-71: Froude's note of Nov. 11, 1872, to an unidentified addressee.

1 item added, 8-4-71: A social note by Froude dated Nov. 29 from Oxford.

Froude, James Anthony

3 items added, 12-20-71: In 1861, Froude published The Pilgrim: A Dialogue of the Life and Actions of King Henry the Eighth, an edition of a work by William Thomas (d. 1554). In a letter to Mr. Dean dated only March 13 (ca. 1861), Froude discussed this work, his discovery of a copy of it among the Harleian Manuscripts, and his plans for publication.

Froude's letter of March 13, ca. 1877, concerned the need for new eyeglasses. The addressee, Bowman, was probably Sir William Bowman, the ophthalmic surgeon.

An autograph may or may not relate to J. A. Froude.

4 items added, 7-19-72: On Dec. 31, 1866, Froude wrote to Robert Spence Watson about a lecture engagement at Newcastle.

Poet John Westland Marston was the recipient of a letter of Feb. 11, 1877, in which Froude agreed to sign a petition for royal assistance to an unnamed person.

Froude discussed the problem of international copyright with Charles Scribner, the American publisher (June 3, 1879).

Upon returning from a world tour, Froude requested a copy of Sir John Harington's Oceana (May 19, 1885). The next year he published Oceana, or England and Her Colonies.

1 item added, 8-4-73. In a letter dated only Wednesday, March 27, Froude invited Martin to dinner with Lecky, Trevelyan, Shaw-Lefevre, and Sir Denis LeMarchant. The addressee may have been Sir Theodore Martin.

Elizabeth Fry (1780-1845), English prison reformer, philanthropist, and Quaker minister, was the inspiration in 1817 of the founding of an association for the improvement of female prisoners in Newgate. The 1821 letter thanks James Williams in behalf of this association for his interest in its work and in the prisoner. In 1839 she referred to her views on separate confinement of prisoners; the 1842 letter comments on prisons abroad and on the new colony at Australasund in West Australia.

This collection consists mainly of personal and military letters to Gen. Joseph Fuller (___-1841) and Lady Mary (Floyd) Fuller, together with various envelopes. Personal, social, and military affairs are the chief subjects of most of the letters.

Correspondents include Gen. Charles D'Orsay, Baron Knessebeck, the Earl of Munster, Sir Robert Smirke, and Baron Walpole.

Writing from the Royal Palace in Paris on Feb. 14, 1819, the Countess of Verac states that owing to the death on Jan. 20 of Charles IV, King of Spain and uncle of the Duchess of Orleans, the latter is required to postpone until Feb. 18 the pleasure of seeing the Fullers.

FULLER, Sir Joseph.

The Duke of Wellington writes on Nov. 26, 1834 [?], mentioning Sir Robert Peel,

Gen. Viscount Rowland Hill writes to Fuller on Dec. 5, 1838, proposing to relieve him of the presidency of the Board of Gen. Officers and to nominate Gen. Sir J. C. Dalbiac to replace him. Hence, a modicum of caution would appear to be indicated before accepting the D.N.B.'s description of the Board presidency as "a post he [Fuller; ultimately resigned through ill-health" (VII, 753).

FULLER, Sir Joseph.

There are three undated items from the Countess of Pembroke, one of them mentioning the Grand Duke of Russia.

3 items transferred from Sir Robert Peel, Second Baronet, MSS., 6-3-64. There are two personal letters from Peel to Juliana Rebecca Fuller, only daughter of Sir Joseph Fuller, on

Sept. 9, 1838, and Oct. 8, 1841. The letter of 1841 relates to Juliana's marriage to Sir Hugh Purves-Hume-Campbell, Seventh Baronet. The last page of an undated letter is apparently addressed to Miranda (Floyd) Fuller, wife of Sir Joseph and sister of Lady Peel.

The collection consists of papers of the Fuller family, primarily correspondence between Solon L. Fuller, a Confederate enlisted man, who wrote most of his letters while stationed in Savannah, Georgia, to his wife, Elizabeth Smith Fuller, who remained behind on the family farm in Alabama. Other letters include those of son Sidney, also enlisted in the Confederate Army, from Montgomery, Alabama, and Kingston, Tennessee, and one letter from son John, who had moved to Oxford, Mississippi, and enlisted in a regiment raised in that state. Mrs. Fuller occasionally sent Sidney's letters on to Solon with notes of her own added thereon, while granddaughter Caldonia, who lived with Elizabeth, sometimes added her barely decipherable greeting to grandfather.

Elizabeth's letters to Solon reveal a bitterness. She felt he had abandoned her with insufficient food, money, and materials to manage the farm and stay alive. Solon responded with apologies and suggestions as to how she might adapt. There is considerable discussion of shortages and prices of foods, feed, cloth, and farm supplies, and of Solon's vain efforts to obtain a furlough. Elizabeth's actual and feared health problems are also discussed.

The exact locus of the Fuller homestead is unclear. Elizabeth directed Solon to send his letters to Chulafinnee (Cleburne County), Alabama, rather than the usual post office in order that they could be more conveniently fetched. Other locations in Alabama mentioned include Talladega, where a daughter apparently lived, and Tallapoosa County, where a colonel lived who might help Elizabeth.

Fuller, Stephen. Papers, 1702 (1786-1796) 1796.
London, England.

Stephen Fuller (1716-1808) was the seventh son of John Fuller and Elizabeth Rose, iron mongers of Sussex. This family was founded in Sussex in the 16th century by John Fuller, a gentleman from London. There is a memorial to the patron of the family in the Uckfield Church with the date 1610. This family was connected with Uckfield for three generations and later moved to Tanhouse or Tanners in the parish of Waldron where, in the first half of the 17th century, Samuel Fuller erected a fine mansion. From Waldron, the descendants removed to Lewes and finally settled at Rose Hill in Brightling. In the 18th century, the Fuller family, headed by John Fuller, father of Stephen, was principally gunfounders for the Royal Ordnance. The business of the Fuller family in the foundry business gradually declined through the 18th century.

Fuller, Stephen

Stephen was born November 26, 1716. His godfathers were a cousin, Thomas Fuller, and Mr. Thomas Shirley; his godmother being Mrs.

Courthope of Whiligh. Stephen's mother died when he was only eleven and young Fuller entered the foundry business following his father's footsteps. During these years Fuller learned the armament business thoroughly which became an asset in his later career as Jamaican agent, for supplying weapons for the colonies' defense was a major part of the job. On July 8, 1744, Fuller married Elizabeth Noakes. His father died the following year and the foundry business descended to John, elder brother of Stephen.

sometime between 1744 and 1763. In the latter year he was elected Colonial Agent for the island of Jamaica, to represent her to the English Crown. He held this office for 30 years losing it in 1794 to Mr. Robert Sewell. During this long period of service Fuller became acquainted with almost every confidential servant of the Crown and member of parliament. His two daughters, Sarah and Philippa, married respectively Hans Sloane Stanley (1739-1827) and William Dickinson (1745-1806). Both of Fuller's sons-in-law were members of parliament throughout much of their careers, giving Fuller excellent parliamentary representation. Fuller had to run for election every three years to hold his office with Jamaica, and when he was defeated in 1794, a unanimous Vote of thanks was passed by the Assembly of Jamaica for his services. Fuller had a strong interest in science which is illustrated by his various letters to well known inventors and doctors of the period. After his retirement little is known of his life until his death in 1808.

The Stephen Fuller papers in this collection span the period 1786-1796 with a few scattered papers outside these dates. Written during the last years of Fuller's agency, they are important to all types of trade affecting the Jamaican Colony. The letters by Fuller cast light on the government and politics of England and Jamaica. They are exceedingly important to the Wilberforce movement to end the slave trade. Fuller, the other agents, and various organizations of absentee Jamaican landlords were the center of the opposition to Wilberforce. Fuller has copied many sets of customs statistics, and import and export lists, which are valuable on the subject of colonial trade. A long series of correspondence with George Rose and William Pitt illustrates attempts by the colonists to establish a marine insurance agency and to abolish the Vice Admiralty courts. In the 1790's the slave insurrections in the Spanish West Indies form an important topic. The letters are most important in illustrating the institution of the Colonial agent, his ways and means of opposing, and pressuring the government to legislate on policies acceptable to the Jamaican legislature. These efforts are directed towards such policies as keeping up sugar rebates, preventing the loss of the sugar monopoly, blocking colonies like Sierra Leone which might form competition, gaining the right of Jamaica to trade with America during war and hurricane crises, and keeping up protective tariffs against European beverages and halting the liquor smuggling which injured Jamaica's rum industry.

Fuller, Stephen

There are several letters of particular interest by Fuller to Gen. George A. Elliott in

1786 concerning a medal for the pope and a medal for the King of Prussia. Another letter of 1786 to the Committees of Correspondence in Jamaica concerns the trade reciprocity treaty of 1786 between England and France. Another letter of March, 1786 to Alan Gardner shows the connection between naval personnel like Hugh Pigot, Samuel Barrington, and William Nathan and the landlords of Jamaica. Letters of 1785 between John Braithwaite, agent for Barbados, and the King's ministers concern emergency trade with America during a famine. A letter of April, 1786, mentions a favor done for Henry Temple, Viscount Palmerston. Tables regarding import and export of various West Indian commodities occur for 1785-1894. Tables for exports of rum, sugar and indigo for 1784 and 1785 are found in I, 26-28. Letters of 1785 and 1786 to Alured Clark, Lt. Gov. of Jamaica, concern Fuller's reelection and secret dispatches. A series of letters, 1786 and after, show that Thomas Townshend, Viscount Sydney, was a friend of the Jamaican interest in English government.

One of the amusing series of letters beginning in 1786 and continuing for years concerns a statue of George Brydges, Lord Rodney, which Fuller purchased for Jamaica from the famous sculptor John Bacon. A letter of June 5, 1786, to Townshend concerns runaway slaves from Jamaica to Cuba and an effort to gain their return. A letter of June, 1786, concerns the important assistance Fuller gains from Richard Pennant-Baron Penrhyn, Edward Long, and Bryan Edwards, all experts on West Indian affairs. Another letter of June 1786 is about smuggling and failure of the riding officers to stop it. More letters of the fall and winter of 1786 deal with the hurricane in the Indies and brandy smuggling. A summary letter of Feb., 1787, tells of a long fight to reduce rum duty in England.

A letter to Lord Sydney of April 2, 1787, opens a long series which lasted until 1794, concerning transplanting breadfruit to the West Indies. William Bligh and Nathaniel Portlock are connected with this venture and the famous Bounty meeting. A printed list of exports and imports from the West Indies in 1787 is included in I,117. In 1787 a series of correspondence concerning the Freeport Act involves Charles Jenkinson-Baron Hawkesbury, as does a controversy over private Jamaican acts. A letter to the Committee of Correspondence in 1787 discusses reinstating William V, Prince of Orange, to the Dutch throne. In December, 1787, occurs the first letter concerning the limitation of the British slave trade. This attempt to restrict the slave trade involves William Wilberforce and takes up a majority of Fuller's interest until 1794. Other prominent figures involved in this controversy are; William Pitt, Gardner, Pigot, Barrington, Peter Porker, Baron Penrhyn, Rodney, Bryan Edwards, Benjamin Vaughn, the

the Duke of Clarence (future William IV), Edward Long, William Wyndham Grenville, Henry Dundas, Sir Joshua Roroley, William Hatham, Charles James Fox, Charles Jenkinson, Sir Joseph York-Baron Dover, George Dempster, Thomas Pelham-Earl of Chechester, General Elliott, Simon Taylor, Charles Lennox-Duke of Portland, John Montague-Earl of Sandwich, Robert Norris, Benjamin Allen, Sir Joseph Banks, and Banastre Tarleton. There are a few letters, Dec., 1787-Jan., 1788, concerning a packet system.

In I, 149, Fuller has compiled a list of the Negro-white proportion for Jamaica in 1773. More statistics on slave importation, and distribution are found in I, 165. Clippings from daily newspapers concerning the slave trade are found in I, 174, 177, 179, 181. Such clippings are found throughout the collection.

Fuller's job during the early part of the controversy was to gather historical material to oppose the anti-slave traders as can be seen in the correspondence of 1788. He compares the French "code noir" and the Jamaican law. He pulled navy men into parliament, March-May,

1788, to testify in favor of the slave trade. A letter to George Rose in 1788 concerns dumping condemned Canadian liquor on the world market. A list of the Council and Assembly members of Jamaica (1788?), is found in I, 319-20. A series of letters, December 1788-February 1789 gives a good feeling of the tension during the Regency crisis of George III. Francis Rawdon-Hastings-Lord Rawdon was mentioned concerning the Regency affair. A clipping from the Daily Advertiser favoring Prince of Wales' regency is enclosed.

Again in 1789 the correspondence of Fuller is taken up with his fight against the Wilberforce group. In a letter to James Farquarson of 1789, Fuller discusses a present of a diamond star given Prince William Henry by the Jamaican legislature. Alured Clarke, governor of Jamaica, is discussed in a letter to William Henry C. Bentinck, Duke of Portland. George Keith Elphinstone is discussed in a letter of Feb. 11, 1789 to the Committee of Correspondence. A letter of March 21, 1789 describes an attack Fuller suffered from pickpockets near Covent Gardens. Abstracts of the overseer of the poor and charts on imports and prices at London ports are in I, 399-400. A letter in Fuller's hand (I, 411, 412) gives Fuller's strategic plan for Baron Penrhyn to block Wilberforce's petitions to parliament. In May, 1789, Fuller discussed appointments to Jamaican Council with Judge, Sir Henry Gould. Accounts of the net produce of Customs duties for 1788-1789 and the Stamp duties for this period are in I, 421-424. In June, 1789, Fuller petitioned George III for baronetcy of Sir Charles Price. Letters of the summer of 1789 regarding changes within the British government are important to slave agitation—Fuller's power was partially slipping away. A letter of August, 1789, to John Cope concerning Sir Philip Stephens and Lord Hood demonstrates Fuller's influence with the Admiralty.

In 1790 the Wilberforce agitation remains the primary subject of the papers. Several letters deal with the meeting on the Bounty, as the news reaches England. An interesting correspondence between Fuller and Howard Thomas, Earl of Effingham, the new governor of Jamaica, spans a period of late 1789-1791. The most important letter is that of April 7th which lists all the important men of England and how they lined up on the anti-slave trade affair of which he gives a good summary. Letters to George Rose and Sir Evan Nepean illustrate attempts by Fuller to gain an interview with Pitt over the thorny Vice-Admiralty Court question. To the Committee of Correspondence in June, 1790, Fuller, describes results of last parliamentary election. Letters of 1790 deal with naval preparations for war with Spain, during the Nootka Sound controversy. In I, 524-525, there is a Spanish census ordered by Count de Floridablanca, Secretary of State under Charles III and Charles IV of Spain. An important letter of Dec. 4, 1790 concerns the Spanish agreement to return runaway slaves. Don Josef Maria Chacon, Spanish Governor of Trinidad, has written on this same subject. Letters of December 1790 describe further changes in the British government as John Baker Holroyd, the Earl of Sheffield, becomes the leader of the opposition. An exchange of correspondence with General Elliott-Lord Heathfield concerns the general's marrying a young foreign girl.

In 1791 a proposed duty to be added to the Indies' sugar and rum becomes a subject of Fuller's correspondence, and the battle with Wilberforce continues. An involved correspondence concerning attempts to gain Spain's return of runaway slaves occurs in his correspondence. The subject of Spanish ownership of islands off the Mosquito coast is discussed, and the Jamaican fear of their use as privateer base. In March, 1791, the subject of sugar from Bengal and Henry Thornton's projected settlement of Sierra Leone becomes a topic of concern. In April Fuller writes Bryan Edwards about Pitt's trouble with Russia and Pitt's plans to send Lord Hood into the Baltic with a fleet. Lord Carhampton joins the planters' interests as shown in the April correspondence. Several letters concern Fuller's insistence on Colonial improvement in laws towards Negroes which will give him grounds to oppose Wilberforce. A list of rum and sugar imports, 1790-

1791, is in II, 57. Fuller's scientific interest is typified by a letter to Dr. Lorimer, May 10, 1791, on Oviedo's writings and magnetic declination and a clipping and illustration of a patented steam Ritcher in II, 95. Another member list of Jamaican Council and Assembly is found in 1791. Correspondence begins in late 1791 regarding slave revolts in Hispaniola and attempts to reenforce British Indies with troops to prevent further revolts. Sir Adam Williamson and Philip Affleck are supporters of the reinforcement plan. A letter to the Committee of Correspondence in December, 1791, tells of dissenters' boycott of sugar until the slave trade is stopped.

The correspondence of 1792 continues on the slave insurrection topic and attempts to get troops to the Indies where the Jamaican assembly has actually offered to pay for them. The correspondence of 1792 concerning purchase of weapons for the Indies is especially interesting—especially when the old gun maker, Fuller finds Samuel Galton, another gun maker, is sending defective weapons. The Duke of Richmond is connected with these negotiations. A letter of Feb. 1, 1792, congratulates Adam Williamson who has been named governor of Jamaica. Correspondence with various government ministers concerning sailing of Alan Gardner with reinforcements for Jamaica occurs in early 1792. By March, 1792, correspondence again deals with sugar prices and East India sugar and Wilberforce's movements. A letter to Henry Dundas, April 5, 1792, discusses effect of Commons' resolution of April 3, for gradual slave trade abolition. A letter of April 11, lists all the places petitioning Commons to abolish the slave trade. Fuller's instructions to Law, Dallas, and Sewell giving major points on proslave trade argument, are found in II, 284-292. An unsigned petition of Commons concerning Hatchpot act is found in II, 296-297. A summary of the 1792 slave trade bill is given in a letter of June 4, 1792.

In early 1793 the major topic of the letters is the war brewing between France and England. Various letters of this year concern attempts by Jamaica to gain more free trading.

ports. Lord Hawkesburg and Henry Dundas are important in this correspondence. The Duke of Clarence becomes involved against the Wilberforce group in 1793. Admiral Richard Howe is discussed in his attempts to find the French fleet. A list of the ships lost at Toulon is found in a letter of Dec. 18-19, 1793.

In <sup>na</sup>Feb., 1794 letter to the Committee of Correspondence, Fuller tells of a new angle to Wilberforce's attack. Another deals with Charles Fox's comments on the convoy system. There is a series of letters dealing with pensions and petitions for members of the crew of the Antelope mail packet which engaged the French during a trip to Jamaica. Between Fuller and Simon Taylor and Adam Williamson pass several letters concerning emergency trade between the American mainland and the West Indies. The Council and Assembly members of Jamaica in 1794 are listed in II, 418-419. More trade statistics for 1792-1794 appear in II, 424-425. French privateering becomes a topic for discussion in 1794. A letter of introduction to James Harris, Earl of Malmesbury, was written by Fuller June 7.

1794. In August Fuller comments on John Jay's efforts to gain a commercial treaty between the United States and England. The Duke of Portland is involved. Lord Balcarres, Alexander Lindsay, becomes the new governor for Jamaica in November, 1794.

The discussion of the politics involved in Fuller losing his agency is discussed in several letters of 1795. Simon Taylor had struggled on behalf of Fuller. The suffering of British troops in the Indies is discussed in Feb. with Portland. Jamaican inheritance law is considered in a letter of March to Sir Godfrey Webster. Another March letter to Simon Taylor mentions Sir John Dalrymple's experiments with beer and lists London imports for the year. A letter of May introduces Sir Ralph Payne to General Adam Williamson. The final items in the bound 2nd volume are mostly congratulations to Fuller for a job well done and a few personal business letters. Sugar and rum import lists, 1795-1798, are in II, 539. A clipping from a paper about the death of Louis XVII of France is on the final page.

Besides the papers above which are bound in two volumes, there are a few scattered items in a folder. The most important items are pages from Fuller's account books. A letter of 1786 involves Mr. Jenkinson in a discussion of a trade bill with the U.S. One letter of 1790 to George Rose discusses Pitt and the Admiralty courts. Some letters to Godfrey Webster and a Mr. Vassal indicate that Fuller and his brother, Rose Fuller, were lawyers or factors for some of the Jamaican landholders. Several letters seeking reelection for himself are written by Fuller. A printed document containing Customs Revenues for 1790-1791 is found. Resolves of Indies' Agents meeting at Fuller's home regarding sugar in 1792 are here. Fuller wrote Dundas in April, 1792, to discuss slave uprisings and St. Domingo troops. Other material concerning the anti-slave trade movement is found. Three editorials of 1796 from The Sun discuss taxes and their effect on England's poor. There are scattered drawings and a portion of Sir Isaac Newton's Principia is copied. Jamaican slavery and cattle records occur for years 1734-40, 1745.

The final item is a list of the produce of the sugar colonies for about 1742.

Important correspondents to Fuller are: William Pitt - "The Younger," Charles Jenkinson, Howard Thomas, William Wyndham Grenville, George Augustus Eliott, Charles Lennox, Josef Maria Chacon, William Blake, and Henry Dundas.

W. W. Fuller was born on Aug. 28, 1858, at Fayetteville, N. C.; son of Thomas C. and Caroline D. (Whitehead) Fuller. He graduated from the U. Of Va. in 1878 and then studied law at Dick and Dillard's Law School at Greensboro, 1879. On Feb. 19, 1880 he married Annie M. Staples, and in that same year was admitted to the bar. He became general counsel to the American Tobacco Co. and many other corporations. He retired in 1912 to devote himself to farming and country life. His home was "Haymount," Briarcliff, N. Y. He died on Aug. 23, 1934.

A letter of Oct. 11, 1925, from W. W. Fuller to an unidentified nephew, eulogizes James B. Duke, who had just died.

Fuller wrote the sketch of Mr. Duke in Samuel A'Court Ashe's Biographical History of North Carolina. In 1922 he wrote a poem entitled "Captain Samuel A. Ashe." This poem appears in the volume of poetry in this collection. Nearly all the poems in this volume have been published in By-Paths, (Go to next card.)

Fuller - Thomas Papers, 1810-1904. Louisburg, Franklin Co., and Wilmington, New Hanover Co., N. C.

Mainly the personal and business papers of Jones Fuller (1808-1870), his son Edwin Wiley
Fuller (1847-1876), and William George Thomas (d. ca. 1889), and their relatives, friends, and business associates in N. C., Va., Ala.,
and N. Y.

The following families are among those connected with the Fuller-Thomas group:

Arendell, Battle, Burgwyn, Claiborne, Crenshaw, Daniel, DeRossett, Fuller, Gillett, Hill, Inge, King, Lightfoot, Long, Malone, Mason, McIlwaine, Moon, Parham, Penn, Person, Reid, Recaud, Spencer, Staples, Thomas, Winston, and Yarborough.

Biographical material on Jones Fuller is contained in an obituary notice and in Methodist Episcopal Church, South, resolutions. Born in Franklin Co., N. C., in 1808, he died in Louisburg, N. C., on July 17, 1870. His parents were Baptists and so was his early religious training. In 1829 he lived in Mobile, Ala., where he was apparently a cotton broker. On a visit to his relatives in Franklin Co., in 1843, he was converted at a protracted camp meeting at Franklinton. Upon his return to Mobile he joined a Methodist church where the Rev. Jefferson Hamilton (1805-____) was the pastor. In 1856 Fuller transferred his Methodist church membership to Louisburg, where he filled a stewardship and other posts of trust. During the last 14 years of his life he engaged in mercantile business in Louisburg. By 1854 he seems also to have been connected with Messrs. Lewis and Whiting, of Mobile.

Jones Fuller, ca. 1846, married Miss Anna Long Thomas, of Louisburg, N. C., sister of Dr. William George Thomas (____-ca. 1889), physician of Wilmington, N. C. The Fullers had at least two children: 1. Edwin Wiley Fuller (1847-1876), and 2. Anna Richmond Fuller (1853-____), also called "Nan Rich,"

"Annie," "Nannie," "La," etc.

Edwin Wiley Fuller was born in Louisburg and attended at least one school there, including what is now Louisburg College. He was at the University of North Carolina in 1864-1866 and the University of Virginia in 1867-1868. Serving in his father's store in Louisburg as a clerk, he managed it after his father's death. He was sometime mayor of Louisburg. In Sept. 1871, he married Mary E. [Ellis?] Malone (____-1884), Louisburg.

Fuller - Thomas Papers.

They had two children: Ethel Stuart (____-1875) and Edwin Sumner Fuller (1876-____). The second child, despite the masculine name, is a girl.

His chief claim to fame was that he was a very minor writer. While he was a student at the U. of Va., he composed his chief work, a poem entitled "The Angel in the Cloud," published in 1871. He also wrote various poems, stories, and letters, as well as a novel, Sea Gift. See Robert Lee Flowers, "Edwin W. Fuller," The Trinity Archive (October, 1895), pp. 332-343.

William George Thomas practiced medicine in Wilmington, N. C., for many years. He served once or twice as Wilmington Port physician during the Civil War. He had at least two children, Bell (a girl) and Dr. George Gillett Thomas, Sr. (1848-1920). The son studied in the U. of N. C. in 1864-1866 and in the U. of Va., in 1866-1868, receiving his M. D. from the University of Maryland in 1871. He practiced as a physician and surgeon in 1871-1898, and served as chief surgeon of the Atlantic Coast Line Railway, President of the N. C. Medical Society, and President of the N. C. State Board of Health.

The manuscripts are divided into two sections the Fuller Division, 1810-1904; and the Thomas Division, 1860-1887.

3 items added, 12-1-82: E. Fuller's letter of July 16, 1851, from Fayetteville, N.C., to Jones Fuller in Louisburg, N.C., expresses concern over Jones's health and tells of the recent loss of a daughter at birth, his having the body of her little brother exhumed, having a large coffin made, and of burying them together in one grave. The letter of Aug. 14, 1861, of R. H. J. Blount of Wilmington, N.C. was written to Jones Fuller about his wife's share of an estate Fuller was administering. He also mentions the hard times the war is already causing, but expresses hope that Jones's county is doing its "full share of furnishing troops." He states that his county of Beaufort has sent six companies and three or four more are in the course of being organized, and that the old Union, especially Whig, counties are showing more interest in furnishing troops than are the "rampant Democratic Secessionist counties." In reporting on his family he mentioned that there had been a few cases of typhoid fever in that area but that most of the cases had recovered.

Edwin W. Fuller in writing to his parents on Sept. 30, 1865, while a sophomore at the University of North Carolina mentioned the end of "Negro troubles" that had resulted in some arrests, the agony of having a tooth pulled and the charge for a gold filling, and his move off campus to a quieter place where he could study much better.

Fullerton, David. Papers, 1787-1920. Greencastle, Franklin County, Pa.

Most of this collection centers around David Fullerton (1772-1843), who served as a major in the War of 1812, U. S. Representative from Pa. (1819-1820), and Pa. State Sen. (1827-1839), yet a number of papers deal with the Ervin, Gordon, and Snively families, as well as miscellaneous subjects. In approximately the last two decades of his life Fullerton seems to have devoted himself chiefly to his law practice and business interests; at least, the papers herein deal more with these matters than with his military and legislative activities. A few papers deal with the Franklin Rail Road Company, of which he was treasurer. There are many lawyers' letters and legal documents, some of them relating to the settlement of estates in Pa. and to the State Supreme Court.

A letter of 1827 discusses commodity prices in London, international trade, and Bolivia. David Fullerton, writing on Jan. 15, 1828, to his wife, Joanna, mentions a James Findley, who is perhaps the U. S. Representative from Ohio of that name.

Only a few papers deal with the Civil War. A letter of ca. Sept. 28, 1863, denounces slavery, secession, and the C. S. A., and praises John Brown. Another letter in the same year rejoices over the election of John Brough as Gov. of Ohio and attacks slavery, secession, and Jefferson Davis. The writer praises U. S. Gens. U. S. Grant, G. G. Meade, B. F. Butler, P. H. Sheridan, W. T. Sherman, et al.

A Baptist minister has gone crazy over closed communion according to a letter of Mar. 13, 1867. An undated letter, probably written during the Civil War, denounces the South. Another undated letter discusses the Ohio Women's Campaign for Prohibition of Alcoholic Beverages. Correspondents include James Dunlop.

There is a printed report of the Committee on Education, which was read in the Pa. House of Representatives on Jan. 27, 1831.

Sallie M.H. Fulton was a Baltimore belle -
- judging from the correspondence. The letters are from her young friends, who lived in Charlestown, Jefferson Co., Va. (now W.Va.) and in York, Pa. The young people write of their beaux, dances, etc. There are three Civil War letters. One from York, Pa., tells of the Confederate invasion, and the writer complimented the orderly conduct of the soldiers. Another tells of the young men leaving for the army.
There is little material of any consequence con-

This collection consists primarily of family letters and business papers stretching over the period of a hundred years following 1830. Most of the items are from the Funkhouser family, but there are some papers which bear dates since 1910, of another family group, the Millers.

There are two land grants in the collection, one from Edm. Randolph to Peter Hoshaur in 1788 and one from Joseph Johnson to Andrew Funk-to 1830 are land deeds in Philadelphia, Pa. and in Virginia. The will of George Funkhouser, Andrew's father, is dated January 18, 1815.

After 1830 the letters are numerous from various relatives in Virginia, Ohio, Missouri, Indiana, and Wisconsin. These letters tell of many things, such as the Westward trip, the land, the people, Indian treaties and land, religious activities, railroads, economic prosperity and panic, speculation in land on a small scale, specie difficulties, mercantile businesses, opposition to slavery, U. S. forts on the border of Missouri, activities of the Indians, legal affairs, national politics, sickness and health, the raising of stock in Missouri, and farming in general. Also, there is a very good description of the "Gentile" settlers' side of the Mormon trouble in Missouri in a letter of October 26, 1838. The most numerous of these letters are from John Kerr, a son-in-law of Funkhouser's who went to the West around 1850, taking with him Funkhouser's rather young daughter whom he had evidently married when she was 13.

Funknouser, Andrew. Papers. Sketch. 4

This marriage had caused considerable difficulty and neither of the men ever quite forgot it. Kerr was a lawyer and a "sharpie" and he had numerous enemies. He was constantly in financial difficulties, probably as a result of his speculative activities. His father-in-law was the "only hope" for him in such times and he wrote very pleading--and threatening--letters. These letters are good in their description of land deals and practices and in their description of conditions during and after the Civil War in the states west of the Mississippi.

There are several wills in the collection: Elizabeth Morgan, July 10, 1845; Rebecca Miller, December 19, 1848; Elizabeth Hickie, July 3, 1849; and Absalam Rinker, March 2, 1854. There are papers of several estates in addition, because this was one of Funkhouser's varied activities.

A letter from a student at V. M. I., September 2, 1844, tells of homesickness, courses, professors, and friends.

The Civil War papers include letters from R. H. Simpson telling of his attitude toward the enemy, conditions of the troops, and giving directions for the home farm. There are statements that indicate the presence of Generals Walker and Archer's brigades on the land of Andrew Funkhouser for three weeks in 1863-64 and that tell of the amount of wood that they used off the land. Also, Funkhouser's account book tells of Confederate Army supply purchases. There are two lists of farm buildings, equipment and products burned or seized by order of Gen. Sheridan on October 7, 1864; in his claim against the United States Funkhouser places the damages at nearly $5,000. There are also "Tax in Kind" estimates and receipts.

There is a lengthy diary of Rev. G. H. Snapp of the United Brethren in Christ Church covering about six months in 1863. He was a brother-in-law of Andrew's son, Casper. A typed copy<sup>(only)</sup> of the diary is included in the collection. It discusses churches on his circuit; church activities such as revival meetings, prayer meetings, Sunday Schools; difficulties among the members; ministers in the United Brethren and other churches; United Brethren conferences; military positions of the armies; chaplains in the army; camps of soldiers and their conditions; brutality stories of the war; general conditions of the people at home and their problems; personal attitudes toward the war; a Methodist Annual Conference which decided on eternal separation from the North. In addition to the diary there are many letters to Rev. Snapp in the years down to 1900 from a wide variety of people. One of these letters of November 14, 1892 tells of the work of the Salvation Army in the Boston area. He was also engaged in selling religious books for the United Brethren and for the American Tract Society, and there are many business papers in connection with this occupation. There is also some printed religious material of this kind. For more information on Rev. G. H. Snapp, see A. P. Funkhouser, History of the Church of the United Brethren in Christ--Virginia Conference, 1921, in the Duke Divinity School Library.

There are a number of letters from commission merchants in Winchester, Baltimore, Alexandria, and Washington both before and after the Civil War. In the 1890's there are some "price current" bulletins from Washington; these are found in the printed material folder.

There is some mention of post-war conditions in various letters. A business letter from Missouri discusses the different railroads that are being built around Plattsburg in 1869.

After 1880 the generation largely changes and most of the family letters are from the children of Casper Funkhouser. In understanding these letters, a very good biographical and genealogical sketch of the children of Andrew Funkhouser down to 1910 in the undated folder will be found helpful. Letters in 1880-1882 from Casper's children at Shenandoah Seminary, Dayton, Va. tell of school life and classes. Occasional letters from George A. Funkhouser, a brother of Casper, who was a professor at Bonebrake Theological Seminary in Dayton Ohio, tell of family conditions and school activities. Letters from William M. Funkhouser, second son of Casper, describe farming conditions in New Jersey around 1890. Various children of Casper were in the teaching profession at different times: Turner Lee in Ohio, 1886-7, Charles in Maryland, 1895, George in Virginia, 1896, and Edgar in New Jersey, 1896. Numerous letters from Charles, a teacher at Kee Mar College, Hagerstown, Maryland, in the 1890's have occasional references to the school, professors, and enrollment.

The various letters from Casper's children and their wives after 1900 include Edgar, a doctor in New Jersey state institutions, William, a business man and well driller in New Jersey, Turner, a farmer in Eastern Virginia, J. Ott, an installer of organs with Möller's Organ Factory in Maryland, George, a clerk at Möllers, Charles a professor at Shenandoah Collegiate Institute, Dayton, Va., and Ella, whose husband, James Ruebush, was also a professor at Dayton, Va. These letters are largely concerned with family problems of a personal nature, although they contain references to various occupations.

The remainder of the letters concern the family of Edward J. Miller. Several letters in 1929 to Mrs. Edward J. Miller express sympathy during the period of the death of her husband. There are a few business papers of this family from 1910 to 1940 including especially tax receipts and wheat allotment applications and a contract of the AAA in 1933.

The folders of printed material contain much material concerning teaching: teacher's exams, textbook lists, educational placement bureaus, etc. There is material relative to life insurance, especially the Equitable Company. There are copies of a civil service examination taken by George Funkhouser around February, 1899. There are two sets of "standing orders" for a mental institution, probably one of the hospitals in New Jersey at which Dr. Edgar B. Funkhouser was employed. Announcements of commencement exercises from several schools are included, especially one from Washington and Lee U. in 1894 and one from Jefferson Medical College in 1900. (Some of these items are in the folders of letters.)

There are many business papers in separate folders after 1830. The tax receipts of Andrew Funkhouser in Virginia are fairly complete from 1830 to his death in 1886. There are also tax receipts on Missouri land from 1850-1880. There is a great variety of notes, receipts, and bills of all kinds. Various papers of Andrew Funkhouser show him as an administrator of estates, guardian of children, justice of the peace, etc. He was also quite interested in the work of the United Brethren Church and there are a number of business papers reflecting his efforts as a trustee. Also, numerous letters refer to the temperance movement among the United Brethren, especially one of June 8, 1886. In the 1880's there are a number of business papers of the Shenandoah Valley Assembly which was a camp ground of the United Brethren at Mt. Jackson, Va., including one volume of the minutes of shareholders' meetings. Monroe Funkhouser was the treasurer of the organization.

Samuel B. Funkhouser had a general store in the late 1830's and many bills show the prices of goods which he purchased; apparently Andrew joined the business with him, but they went out of business in 1843. There are several insurance policies including a fire insurance policy with the Empire State Mutual Insurance Company for $1000 in 1855 and a fire insurance policy with the Insurance Company of the Valley of

A biographical sketch of Charles M. Furman, financier, is in Appletons' Cyclopaedia of American Biography. The first of the three letters in this collection was written by Charles Furman on Apr. 13, 1836, from Montgomery, Ala., to his sister Maria in Charleston. He was on a trip to New Orleans. He reports on visits with various relatives along the way and mentions the towns through which he has passed, contrasting Milledgeville, Ga., unfavorably with Macon. He says he travelled eighty miles through the Creek Nation but that most of the people he saw along the road in the Nation were whites.

The second letter was written on Jan. 31, 1839, to Charles from his brother J. B. Furman in Darlington, S.C. As a farmer he had become enthusiastic about silk production, considering planting mulberry trees and growing silkworms, sericulture being an occupation that a late resident of Longtown, S.C., had begun and at the time of his death the previous year was prospering from. The last letter was written on Sept. 24, 1840, to Maria Furman from another brother, H. H. Furman, who was struggling to make a living in some business in New Orleans. In mentioning relatives he tells of a cousin in Marengo, Ala., who died following the amputation of a leg she had broken.

Furman, McDonald. Papers. Privateer, Sumter Co., S. C.

The collection contains personal letters addressed to McDonald Furman. There is also a sketch of the life of Richard Furman.

The box contains a genealogical table of the Furman family.

These letters of McDonald Furman, lecturer, student of local history, and member of the South Carolina Historical Society, are largely family letters interspersed with a few of a business nature. Those of the former type were written by Furman's aunt who signed herself simply "Ann." They are filled with family gossip, occasional political comments, references to Clemson College, condolences on the death of Furman's father and of his brother, and occasional references to articles written by Furman, one of which was called "Buried Alive." (See letter dated Oct. 5, 1890).

The principal figure in the business correspondence was Mrs. D. Eli Dunlap who was a teacher in the Presbyterian Mission School established at Leslie, York Co., S.C., for the Catawba Indians. Just what connection McDonald had with this project - beyond a small financial contribution - is not made clear, but it is hinted in one letter (Oct. 20, 1898) that he had been falsely accused of trying to place a Mormon teacher in the school.

Among the undated material is a fairly comprehensive biographical sketch of Richard Furman.

Added, 2-7-51: A letter to the editor of The State in which Furman tells of a petition signed by sixteen young women of South Carolina, in 1734, complaining that widows "captivated" all the marriageable men, and asking the governor to order that no man marrying for the first time should marry a widow.

Added, 7-7-58: A letter of James L. Furman of Aug. 6, 1891, to McDonald Furman relative to personal matters and the publication of his history of Louisiana. By this time he had

G., J. Arithmetic Book, 1771-1772

The identity of the writer of this manuscript arithmetic book (220 pp.) is incomplete and somewhat uncertain. It was originally cataloged as belonging to Ann Stevens. The partially legible name of Ann Stewart is written on the inside front cover. However, the handwriting of her name is very plain, while the text is remarkable for its calligraphy. It also seems unlikely that a female would have been taught the kinds of arithmetic exhibited in this volume. Much of the handwriting is copperplate round hand, a style favored by merchants of the period. The drawing of the mermaid also seems a more likely choice for a male. There is a drawing at the beginning of the "Practice" section that includes the initials "J. G." which may well be the initials of the writer. These initials and the dates of 1771 and 1772 are occasionally set centrally in drawings, the dates more than once.

The location of the writer is unknown. Someone who owned the volume much later lived in Louisburg, N.C.

The volume is remarkable for its calligraphy. A variety of handwriting styles were used, and their execution was often excellent. There are numerous drawings of the type that students used to display their writing talents. The drawings include birds, a fish, a mermaid, and faces humorously placed within flourishes.

The arithmetic problems are very varied as was usual for such volumes, and they relate to many aspects of personal and commercial life.

Mainly personal letters, including love letters, addressed to Miss Fannie Bennett, of Norwood, N. C. from her cousin, Risdan B. Gaddy. About 1873 they were married and settled in Polkton, N. C.

Gaddy wrote two letters in 1864 when he was a captain in the 4th Battalion of N. C. Cavalry Vols. (later in the year incorporated into the 59th Regt. of N. C. Cav. Vols.).

A knightly tournament held in N. C. by Rufus Barringer's cavalry brigade, and the gander

In a letter dated only May 28 Gaddy speaks of having known personally most of the characters in John Esten Cooke's Surrey of Eagle's Nest, and also comments briefly on "Jeb" Stuart.

The Polk family is often mentioned in the collection.

Letters 1777-1856 Charleston S.C.

Sketch

---

James, grandson of Christopher and brother of Christopher Edwards Gadsden, was born in Charleston, S.C. May 15, 1788, and died there Dec. 25, 1858. After graduating from Yale in 1806 and engaging in commercial pursuits temporarily, he joined the army, and was appointed lieutenant colonal<sup>2</sup>of engineers. He served with distinction in the War of 1812, and afterwards was Jackson's aide in the expedition to examine the military defences of the gulf and the southern frontiers. In 1818, he took part in the campaign against the Seminole Indians, aiding in the capture of their leaders, Arbuthnot and Ambrister. He was made inspector general of fortifications of the southern division. He was with Jackson when the latter took possession of Florida. With the reduction of the army in 1822, Gadsden became a planter in Florida and was a member of the legislative council of the territory. Under a commission from President Monroe, he removed the Seminoles to Southern Florida and was the first white man to cross the peninsula from the Atlantic to the Gulf. He later returned to his native state, became president of the S.C. Railroad and engaged in commerce and rice culture. In 1853, President Pierce made Gadsden minister to Mexico and on Dec. 30, he negotiated the treaty by which the U.S. came into possession of the territory now forming parts of Arizona and New Mexico, for which $10,000,000 was to be paid. The treaty was so modified that Gadsden was obliged to resume his negotiations in Mexico. These were interrupted by a revolution and Gadsden was superseded before the conclusion of the treaty. He then retired to private life.

GADSDEN, James

Sketch(5)

One letter of this collection deals with the problems of the "incendiary publications" by the abolition societies. Gadsden, naturally interested in this subject, had a number of such tracts which he promised to send to Samuel Duval. The other letter is directed to paymaster General Towson in which Gadsden presents his claims for supplies furnished the Florida militia.

See next card.

Gadsden, James

Sketch (6)

On February 17, 1944, three items were added to this collection.

The earliest, and doubtless the most valuable, is dated June 7, 1777, and was written by Christopher Gadsden. He mentions the enemy's military strategy, his own work in building a bridge between Fort Moubtrie and the mainland, his opposition to U.S. trade with the West Indies because of the military advantage it offers the British, and his attitude toward the military rank which he holds.

The other two items consist of an in-

The exact relationship of these individuals to the Gadsdens mentioned in the earlier part of this sketch could not be definitely determined.

NOTE: The Christopher Gadsden item was accessioned as "Christopher Gadsden" and the second two items of the above ~~XXXXXX~~ addition as "Alexander Gadsden".

26 items added 4-16-51. They are photostats of diplomatic papers relating to U. S.-Mexican relations between 1853 and 1856. The papers are largely the letters of Percy W. Doyle and W. G. Lettsom written from Mexico City to the Earl of Clarendon, British Sec. of Foreign Affairs. They write about the negotiations and treaties for the Gadsden Purchase, Santa Anna's attitude toward the policy of the U. S., the bad state of affairs within Mexico, and the rumors that the U. Gage, George. Papers, 1864-1903. Beaufort, S.C.

Three letter books of George Gage, originally from MacConnellville, Ohio, 1873-1903, and the journal of his wife, Sarah Marshall (Ely) Gage, originally of Lambertville, New Jersey, 1864-1866. They were married in Beaufort in 1866. Gage settled in Beaufort sometime shortly after the Civil War as a surveyor for the United States Government. From 1869 to 1873 he was employed as an engineer on the construction of the Augusta-Beaufort Railroad. Later he became successively the Collector of Customs and operator of a sawmill in Beaufort. While the greater part of his correspondence is concerned with his business and personal affairs, there are many items containing information on Reconstruction in South Carolina. Sarah Gage came to Beaufort in 1863 to teach in the colored schools. Her journal contains an excellent account of conditions in the area between Norfolk, Virginia, and Beaufort in 1866.

The first of the letter books contains letters written by Gage during the years

1873-1876. Gage was then Collector of Customs and Superintendent of Lights. Most of the letters in this volume pertain to these jobs. The chief value of these letters is that they give some indication of the trade carried on at Beaufort and Port Royal. Scattered through the routine correspondence are a few letters and memoranda relating to the South Carolina Free School Fund, which was aided by revenue from customs duties. These are concerned mainly with the dispersement of funds to the schools. A particularly valuable memorandum, dated July 10, 1874, gives an itemized account of the location of the schools, the amount of the teachers' salaries, and the attendance statistics on white and colored students for St. Helena and St. Luke's parishes. There are also a few letters to Robert Smalls, a Negro politician, concerning property leased to Gage by Smalls.

The second letter book contains letters written by Gage during the years 1884-1890. Gage was at that time engaged in the operation of a sawmill. Most of the letters for the years 1884-1888 are concerned with the conduct of this business. In 1888 the lumber business became depressed, causing Gage to seek other means of employment. Between 1888 and 1890 he wrote numerous letters to Thomas E. Miller, then a member of Congress, urging the latter to find a position for him in the Federal Government. These letters contain much information on South Carolina politics. Particularly valuable is the material pertaining to the fight waged at that time by the Democrats to gain control of local government in and around

Gage, George

8

Beaufort. Scattered through the volume are a few letters to Clara Barton, the President of the American Red Cross, who was a close friend of Gage. These contain some incidental comment on Barton's activities. There are also a few items relating to the settlement of the estate of James Wilson Marshall, who first discovered gold in California. Marshall was Sarah Gage's uncle.

The third letter book contains letters written by Gage during the years 1894-1903. Some of these contain information on some construction carried on by the United States Government in the Beaufort harbor. The remainder pertains to family matters.

The journal kept by Sarah Gage provides valuable material relating to Reconstruction in Norfolk, Virginia and the area around Beaufort. Originally, the journal served as the minute book of the Freedmen's and Home Relief Association of Lambertville, New Jersey. Sarah (Ely) Gage was Secretary of the Association. When she went to Beaufort in 1866, she recorded her experiences in the blank pages of the minute book. Since she was still single when she wrote this book, it is cataloged under her maiden name.

Gage, George

The first section of the journal contains the constitution and minutes of the meetings of the Freedmen's and Home Relief Association. The minutes reveal that the association was active during the first half of 1864. It's members met at regular intervals to make clothing for freedmen.

Sarah Gage's journal begins in January, 1866. She gives a full account of her journey from Philadelphia to Beaufort. While in passage she touched Norfolk, where she visited the Freedmen's Bureau. After her arrival in Beaufort she began her work as a teacher in the colored schools. She gives a lengthy account of her work in which she touches upon such matters as her social life, the work being done by the Freedmen's Bureau, and the status of the Negro.

Gage, Thomas. Papers. England

Thomas Gage (1721-1787) was commander-in-chief of British forces in North America (1763-1773, 1775) and last royal governor of Massachusetts (1774-1775). Sir James Wright, royal governor of Georgia from 1760 to 1776, wrote to Gage on June 27, 1775, to request that he be kept informed concerning developments in Massachusetts. Wright indicated that he expected Georgia to follow the example of the other colonies and that the means of defense available to him were inadequate.

This collection is largely comprised of letters, bills, receipts, etc. relative to the operation of the United States Hotel at Saratoga Springs, N.Y. during several decades. The proprietors of that hotel during most of the time covered by this collection were Wm. M. Gage and Dr. John R. Perry.

All of the bills and receipts for the 1880's are addresses to Janwin and Gillis, who were operators of the Troy House of Troy, N. Y. during the decade. Some of the bills addressed to the United States Hotel are from concerns in Troy, but it appears that there is no relationship between the papers of that hotel and those of the Troy House. Since the papers of both concerns came together, however, they have been cataloged as one collection.

The correspondents include: Geo. H. Cobb, Lafayette B. Gleason, John M. Kellogg, and Walter L. Smith.

Gaines, Edmund Pendleton. Papers, 1838. New Orleans, Orleans Parish, La. Sketch.

---

This collection contains a photostatic copy of two items by Gen. Edmund Pendleton Gaines (1777-1849) of the U. S. Army. There is a note of Nov. 29, 1838, from Gaines to Dr. Smith in St. Louis, Mo., transmitting the second item, Gaines' printed report of Oct. 14 on national defense.

The report emphasizes the importance of railroads in national defense. It states that twenty-four of the twenty-six states are on the periphery, leaving Ky. and Tenn. in the interior

Gaines, Edmund Pendleton

as the "Great Military States of the Union."

With an efficient railroad system, Gaines says, a pool of disposable troops could be dispatched thence to any invaded frontier, but without the railroads the U. S. could not advantageously utilize its interior lines of communications against a foreign invader. (He refers to a diagram which is not included.) Such, indeed, he contends, was the case in 1814 when the British invaded Washington, D. C., and President James Madison and the local military forces in the federal city retreated. With a good network of railroads at that time, Gaines says, Coffee's Light Brig. or Carroll's Div. of Tenn., or Thomas' or Adair's Div. of Ky., might have been brought to the successful defense of the nation's capital.

Now, in 1838, argues Gaines in reference to the Maine and Oregon boundary questions, we may reasonably calculate on a war in which two of the most powerful nations in the world may combine their land and naval strength against the U. S. These nations have no love of our democratic institutions. They envy America's influence abroad and know that her population will greatly increase.

Gaines compares the value of railroads in national defense with that of fortifications, to the detriment of the latter. Attacking what was later to be termed "The Maginot Line Complex," he criticizes statesmen who rely too much on defense works. European nations which have constructed expensive and approved fortifications have frequently suffered the greatest losses in warring with equal, or nearly equal, powers. Over-reliance on the invulnerability of defense works--rather than on the skill of trained troops, together with the means of quickly transporting them from the interior to the frontier--may lead to defeat as happened to Napoleon in 1815. Defense works must be well supplied and well garrisoned. The assail- and, free to choose the time and place of attack, may bypass the forts and devastate manufacturing and industrial districts.

Gaines praises Oliver Evans for his work on steam engines, but regrets that the spirit of party prevented the U. S. from entering the "War of 1814"<sup>[sic]</sup>, without a national bank, an adequate system of roads and canals, or enough national unity.

Referring to his proposed system of Canals and Turnpike Roads (1826), Gaines declares that the plan might have been executed by an augmented army of good yeomen and mechanics, instead of the idlers and drunkards who mostly fill the ranks. Partisan spirit is blamed for failing to adopt his plan, as well as for deranging the sound currency established by the Second Bank of the U. S. (This last is an obvious reference to the Panic of 1837.)

Entering into the issue of the federal constitutionality of his scheme of 1826, he opines that Congressional powers "to declare war, to repel invasion, and suppress insurrection" are sufficient, because these powers cannot be implemented without roads and railroads. Since the strong European powers are applying steam power to warships, as well as to land vehicles, it is apparent that the development of railroads is essential to our national existence. He also discusses large floating batteries, propelled by steam and refers to his report of 1822 to the War Dept. on the subject.

Gaines, Edmund Pendleton

Envisioning America's further westward expansion, he recommends the construction of railroads from Memphis, Tenn., and St. Louis, Mo., to the Pacific.

For other members of the family see the James S. Gaines Papers.

GAI RDNER, James. Letters and Documents. 1771-
1816. Charleston, S. C. Historical Sketch

Gairdner was apparently a Charleston merchant (probably of British birth) with large and extensive business connections, particularly in England, France, and the British West Indies. Trading was in tar, lumber, rum, wine, and other items. The letters deal almost entirely with business matters, particularly legal involvements, difficulties in collecting debts, and reveal the harrassments confronting commerce during the Napoleonic period. The documents comprise accounts.

Two letters addressed to Sarah Juliana Maria (Lee) Gales, wife of Joseph, Jr., relative to a mineral lease on land owned by her in Fairfax Co., Va.

2 items added 1-31-57. These consist of a group of mercantile accounts, 1814-1816, and a letter of 1853 from Joseph Gales, Jr. to Hamilton Fish. The accounts reveal many items used in the household of Joseph Gales, Sr. The letter is concerned with Joseph, Jr.'s search for material for the Annals of Congress during the War of 1812. He believed this material to be in

He refers to a speech of John Randolph.

1 item added 5-13-58: Letter of Gales to Charles Morse concerning a legal matter.

General Ledger, No. 2, includes accounts dating from 1825 to 1854. A list of bad debts extends back to 1815. Many prominent politicians, journalists, authors, and businessmen appear in the accounts that can be located through the index at the beginning of the volume. The ledger is especially valuable because of the prominence of Gales & Seaton and its clients and also because the entries include explanatory notes as well as figures.

Gallagher, Charles. Papers, 1885-1888. New York, N. Y.

The material in this collection relates chiefly to Charles Gallagher's application for appointment as a special agent in the Internal Revenue Department and to his claims for relief for losses suffered during the Civil War.

The letter of application, dated June 15, 1885, discusses Gallagher's Civil War service as purveyor to Gen. Benjamin F. Butler, and as adviser to L. C. Baker in tracing the assassin of Gallagher, Chas.

Abraham Lincoln. Attached are Butler's order commissioning Gallagher as purveyor for the Dept. of Va. and N. C., and letters of recommendation by H. A. Atkinson, Jr., Joseph Christian, William Dodge, E. Hogan, M. C. Murphy, and D. E. Sickles.

The remaining items are statements, Congressional bills, and other papers relating to Gallagher's claims for relief for the losses suffered in the destruction of his schooner Nimrod on Dec. 5, 1864, by Confederates, in the James River.

This collection consists largely of the personal correspondence of the Gallagher and related Wilson families, as well as some material concerning the Virginia Free Press of Charles Town, W. Va. The Free Press was established in Harpers Ferry, Va., by John Shannon Gallagher, Sr., and was moved to Charles Town in 1821. Horatio Nelson Gallagher joined his brother on the paper in 1837, and in 1865

Horatio's son, William W. B. Gallaher, also became a partner. The paper remained in the family's hands until William died in 1908.

The collection contains a few letters of John S. Gallaher, Sr., and his son, John S., Jr., and of Horatio N. Gallaher (d. 1883) and his wife Adaline (d. 1883). They deal with family matters and include scattered references to the newspaper business. There are more family letters of William W. B. Gallaher, of his children Nowal Wilson and Louisa (Loulie)

Howland Gallaher, and of his sister Anna and her daughter Eliza, both of whom lived in Washington, D. C. There are no Civil War letters and little material of value on the Free Press.

The larger part of the correspondence concerns the family of William W. B. Gallaher's wife, Belle Wilson. There are several letters to her from her brother Alpheus Waters Wilson (1834-1916), a Methodist bishop in Baltimore, and from his children Maybelle and Nina. One of

There is also some correspondence from another of Mrs. Gallaher's sisters, identified only as Neen, and of Neen's daughter, Nina, both of Washington, D. C.

It appears that the writer was desiring an appointment through William Ballard Preston, who had become Secretary of the Navy but professed to be too proud to press his case as some were doing. He did not resist criticizing Preston. He also wrote about a note he owed his brother, the unusual incident that occurred in Richmond the previous day which was the boxing up of two live Negroes to be sent to Philadelphia, and national politics.

In mentioning the latter he spoke of the call for an anti-Taylor meeting and said the Loco Focos would have "full swing in Congress, because the Free Soilers will join them."

The slave incident reported by Gallaher was not the Henry Box Brown case. Brown, a Virginia slave who had himself shipped in a wooden box, 3' x 2', to the office of the Pennsylvania Anti-Slavery Society, arrived there, according to John W. Blassingame, ed., Slave Testimony..., before Mar. 28, 1849. Blassingame says that

The chief value of this collection, centering around William Galt, Jr., a Richmond merchant, lies in the close connection of several of the writers to Edgar Allan Poe. There are five of John Allan's letters in the set although he does not mention Poe in any of them. Some of the eight letters of Mary Allan, sister of John Allan, contain casual references to Poe, one mentioning the fact that he was in school at Stoke Newington.

GALT, William W.

Sketch. 2

The early letters of the collection were written by William Galt, Sr. (1755-1825) to William Galt, Jr. who, apparently was slightly related to the elder Galt of the same name. Thomas Galt (June 12, 1799-1849), the eldest child of the shipmaster, William Galt, and Jean Malcolm, went to sea at the age of 10. William Galt, (1801-1851) and James Galt (1805-1876) were also children of the shipmaster, William Galt, and Jean Malcolm. Three other children (Mary, Robert, and John) died young. The shipmaster, William Galt, and his wife died early leaving their children orphans. As noted above, Thomas Galt wnt to sea. The care and education of the younger orphans fell on a relative, a "Mrs. Galt" who also died near 1812. After this second loss, William and James Galt were close Mary Allan, the sister of John Allan. She lived at Kilmarnock and perhaps part of the time at Irvine both of which are located in Ayrshire.

GALT, William W.

Sketch. 3.

Mary Allan and her brother, John who was the foster father of Edgar Allan Poe, were neice and nephew of William the father of William Jr., James and Thomas Galt. William Galt, Sr. came to Richmond, Va. about 1775 and ultimately achieved substantial wealth in the mercantile business. William, Sr. assumed the responsibility of educating the younger children of William Galt, the shipmaster. The first eight letters of the collection from 1812 to 1816 are from William Galt, Sr. William Galt, Jr. advising the young man to obtain an education. He outlined the subjects which he wished young William to study and stressed also the necessity of going to dancing school and to church, possibly laying greater stress on the necessity of doing well at dancing school.

GALT, William W.

Sketch. 4

Of greater interest in view of their indir-

GALT, William W.

ect connection with Edgar Allan Poe, are the letters John Allan to William Galt, Jr. These are valuable for the advice contained, advice no doubt similar to that given by John Allan to his son, Edgar Allan Poe. The first from Allan to young Galt (Oct. 5, 1816) is largely concerned with instructions for the latter's imminent trip to Richmond although he added that young Galt's first duty should be to his creator and next to his employer (Wm. Galt, Sr. soon to become young Galt's employer). In his second letter (Mar. 8, 1817) to young Galt, Allan recommended that the younger man practice his bookkeeping and that he be "neuter" in politics upon reaching America in the capacity of foster citizen. In the subsequent letters (June 23, 1818) to young Galt, after the latter's arrival in Richmond, Allan warned the younger man to apply himself to the business of the firm of William Galt, Sr., to abstain from "Drams in the Morning" and to care for his health in the new climate. Young Galt was warned in a fourth letter (Nov 12, 1818) about his hasty temper of which Allan had heard and which he had connected with the possibility of exceptions to remarks concerning young Galt's Scotch accent. The final

GALT, William W.

Sketch. 6.

GALT, William W.

Sketch. 7.

letter (Jan. 28, 1820) of John Allan to young Galt, written from London as were all of his letters, expressed the hope that Galt's younger brother, James, would be "a good Republican" but that he supposed William Galt, Jr. was a "Federalist, ie a moderate Republican a lover of order." Allan also urged Galt to beware of being a flaming Democrat, to curb his temper and to please his uncle, William Galt, Sr.

In these same letter John Allan reveals something of the "many Gaps [in his education] both in general literature and the Sciences," defects which he had repaired by his "own Exertions."

GALT, William W.

Sketch. 8.

William Galt, Sr. also wrote William Galt, Jr., in earlier letters, that the most of Allan's education was obtained in the counting house of the former. These facts concerning the education of John Allan were not known by Hervey Allen the biographer of Edgar Allan Poe.

The collection also contains numerous letters from John Allan's sister; usually to William Galt, Jr.; among the sisters writing were Mrs. Jane Johnston, Mary Allan (8 letters); Mrs. Nancy Fowlds, wife of Allan Fowlds, and Mrs. Elizabeth Miller. Of these the letters of Mary Allan are very interesting especially in regard to her

GALT, William W.

Sketch. 9.

suppositions concerning people and customs in Virginia. The bulk of the letters, however, pertain to complaints from these Scotch beneficiaries of the last will of William Galt, Sr., of which will John Allan, William Galt, Jr. and James Galt, were executors. On this point Hervey Allen's information does not seem as complete as that revealed in these letters. (See Israfel p. 116-117). This complaint from Scottish relatives could not have been due to lack of cash on Allan's part as he paid $14,950 for a large house in Richmond, Va. three months after the probating of William Galt, Sr's will.

GALT, William W.

Sketch. 10.

(See Israfel p. 127.)

The collection also contains letters of Nicholas Walsh, also a Scotch relative of William Galt, Sr., numerous letters from Thomas Galt and his wife, Margeret and Allan Fowlds and John Miller, brothers-in-law of John Allan. There are also a few items pertaining to business only 1 item added 5-13-58, clipping from Richmond (Va.) News-Leader of Feb. 28, 1941. This is an article by Mary Wingfield Scott, concerning a home given by William Galt to a favorite slave, Elizabeth, and he left her a slave in his will.

Gandy Family. Papers, 1848-1868. Darlington, Darlington Co., S. C.

Darius Gandy resided in Darlington, S. C., where he was probably a prosperous planter owning many slaves. His daughter Harriet attended Salem Female Academy in Salem, N. C. Several account sheets in this collection indicate her expenses from 1861-1863. Daniel Gandy was possibly the name of Darius's son and/or brother.

In addition to bills, receipts, and several personal letters, there is also a printed circular dated April 1, 1863, in which the regulations governing the handling and distribution of Confederate Army supplies in Georgia are enumerated.

The details for executing a law to impress slave labor in S. C. for the construction of Confederate fortifications are discussed in a letter of Feb. 1, 1865.

This collection was originally cataloged as the Darius Gandy Papers.

The Ann Henshaw Gardiner Papers begin in the early years of the settlement of Berkeley County, Virginia, with two pioneer families, those of Captain William Henshaw of Springfield Mills, Mill Creek, and of William Snodgrass of Clifton Mills, Back Creek. Both groups married into other prominent families of the region, so that their papers furnish two hundred years of local history and genealogical material for Berkeley County. The Andersons, the Verdiers, the Turners, the Evanses, the McConnells, the Pendletons, the Robinsons, and the Rawlingses, among others, appear throughout the collection.

The early letters are predominantly business in character, concerning the land transactions of John Turner, the surveyor of Berkeley County who registered the land titles of many local families. He was related to the Snodgrass family through his marriage to Ruth Rawlings.

By 1814, the correspondence is centered in

Gardiner, Ann Henshaw

Robert Snodgrass and his brother Stephen. As Berkeley County produced wheat in abundance, the sale of flour from its mills became increasingly important. The Henshaws of Mill Creek in particular left records of sales of large quantities of flour on the Baltimore market; but the Snodgrasses in this period were also milling, although their records are not as numerous for their sales.

Both the Henshaws and the Snodgrasses were involved in the political affairs of Berkeley

County. Levi Henshaw (1769-1843) was a gentleman justice of the peace, a member of the county court and of the Virginia House of Delegates, and sheriff in 1840. Robert Verdier Snodgrass (1792-1861) was commissioner of county revenue, a member of the Virginia House of Delegates, and colonel of the 67th Regiment of Virginia Militia. Their papers reflect these offices, both in the correspondence and in the legal papers. Levi Henshaw (1815-1896) married Sarah Ann, the daughter of Robert Verdier Snodgrass, thus uniting the papers of both families.

^ captain of milit

Berkeley County was an agricultural community, whose conditions were reflected in references to slaves in estates, as runaways, and for sale or hire.

Robert Verdier Snodgrass was concerned in both Democratic politics and legal business with Charles James Faulkner. His son-in-law, Israel Robinson, wrote to Snodgrass of political conditions in Washington, D. C. where he was an office holder. (Later Israel Robinson became clerk of the county court, a judge, and a Confederate general) The son of Robert Verdier Snodgrass, Stephen, became postmaster at Hedgesville, Va., in 1855.

By 1860 the settlement of various family estates reveals a maze of Snodgrass relatives. A letter from a cousin in 1860 comments on John Brown's raid and the arrival of the Japanese Embassy in Washington.

The outbreak of the Civil War shows divided political opinion in the family. In 1862, a letter describes the condition of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad in wartime and of the Negroes in Washington, D. C., where slavery had been abolished. Stephen Snodgrass, a Unionist, did not have an easy time at Hedgesville during the war, and he had to have papers attesting his loyalty. On May 12, 1865, comment is made upon the assassination of President Lincoln.

Henshaw papers predominate after 1865. Business is dull; the collection of money, difficult. As the family has scattered, letters of cousins come from many places, and grandchildren write to Sarah Ann (Snodgrass), the widow of Robert Verdier Snodgrass.

The first William Henshaw (1736-1799) in Berkeley County had married Agnes Anderson. ^ In 1886 correspondence begins about the history of the Anderson family; letters continue into the twentieth century.

matters; in particular, the Rawlings family is the subject of great interest.

Mabel Henshaw married Dr. Samuel H. Gardiner. Her concern for history led her to teach at Shepherd College, Shepherdstown, Jefferson County, W. Va., where she also served as librarian. Mrs. Gardiner was a district chairman of the West Virginia Equal Suffrage Association with correspondence in 1915 and 1916 which reveals the methods women were using to insure the passage of the woman suffrage amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

The daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Gardiner, Miss Ann Henshaw Gardiner, historian, scientist, and teacher, founded nursing education at the Duke University Hospital in 1930.*

Between 1926 and 1930, Mrs. Mabel Gardiner wrote to many friends who remembered details of family weddings in the mid-nineteenth century. As late as 1940 she corresponded with R. B. Woodworth on the history of the Tuscarora Church and other Berkeley County churches. A picture of the Tuscarora Church is with these papers.

(See Picture Cab. II-7)

The heart of the Ann Henshaw Gardiner Papers is the collection of legal papers which date from 1763. Both the Snodgrasses and the Henshaws as justices of the peace and county office holders were involved in a great deal of legal business through the generations. A grouping of legal papers for both families is followed by special sections on land surveys, on estate settlements, and on militia.

The general file of legal papers begins with grants from Lord Fairfax in the 1760's, when Berkeley County was still a part of Frederick County, Virginia. Richard Rigg, the land agent for Lord Fairfax, was the first surveyor in the district settled by the Henshaws and the Snodgrasses. Rawlings family deeds appear in the 1770's.

At the end of the Revolutionary War, John Turner appears as a chain carrier for the land surveys of the County. He became county surveyor, an office which he held until his death in 1811.

Among the family wills is that of Nicholas Henshaw (died 1777). With the deaths of Robert and Stephen Snodgrass in 1830 and 1832, a great deal of administrative work for their estates enters the papers, as Robert Verdier Snodgrass was appointed executor for both men.* David Hunter and Israel Robinson are the clerks of the county court in these early documents. Schools, roads, runaway slaves, the hiring of servants, and the mail are concerns which occupy the papers. With the death of Robert Verdier Snodgrass in 1861, his estate is settled and the legal papers belong to the Henshaws from that date.

The second division of legal papers concerns the settlement of a number of estates, usually those of relatives. The Turner and Gorrell families had intermarried with the Snodgrasses and Henshaws. The earliest papers dating from 1798 contain the will and estate inventory of Joseph Evans. Israel Robinson was executor of the estate of Elon Miller in 1849.

A large group of legal papers concerns the acquisition of land, basic in Virginia economic life in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. Survey plats began in 1753 in old Frederick County, which had been established in 1738. From it Berkeley County was created in 1772. The first surveys, made for the Rawlings and Morgan families, were for land purchased from Lord Fairfax. Richard Rigg, his surveyor, signed the plats showing the Fairfax grants. Rigg is followed by surveyors Thomas Jones and Josiah Swearingen. Many names of early settlers appear in the survey papers. In the 1780's a chain carrier, John Turner, began to make surveys. He married Ruth Rawlings, whose land plats are in the papers. John Turner became surveyor for Berkeley County and remained in office till his death in 1810. His son Thomas, who was his deputy, succeeded him as surveyor for the county. The estate papers of the Turner family, elsewhere in the legal papers, show them as early residents of old Frederick County.

In 1803 land office records appear in conjunction with the survey appears. By this time Robert Verdier Snodgrass was a county commissioner of revenue who worked with the Turners in the sale of land.

The Snodgrass family was involved in militia affairs from 1798, when Robert ( d. 1830) was a 1st lieutenant in the 67th Regiment, 16th Brigade, 3rd Division, Virginia Militia. This county regiment was divided into local companies, each of which was subdivided into classes of roughly seven men. Class rolls, rosters, and officers' lists make up the official papers. By 1820, Robert Verdier Snodgrass was serving as an officer. He became colonel of the 67th Regiment in 1838, thereafter making annual returns.

The constitution of the Berkeley Rangers was drawn up on November 26, 1859, to organize a company of militia from Berkeley County. This company is listed as the Berkeley Border Guards Co. D. 2nd Virginia Infantry, C. S. A. Army, under J. Q. A. Nadenbousch of Martinsburg.

The financial papers are divided between Levi Henshaw I and II and Robert Verdier Snodgrass. Bills and receipts, loans, and household accounts increased as the nineteenth century brought a less self-sufficient life on the farms of Berkeley County. The Snodgrasses ~~and the Henshaws~~ no longer lived at the mill, on Back and ~~Mill~~ Creeks, but had moved to Hedgesville, and ~~Gerardstown~~.

With such long family histories in Berkeley County, it was to be expected that descendants of the Henshaws and Snodgrasses should turn to writing the history of their section of Virginia Valley of Virginia Henshaw was a leader of the Daughters of the American Revolution in Berkeley and throughout West Virginia.* Her sisters, Mabel and Frances, were in Martinsburg by 1916. grass. Mabel (Henshaw) Gardiner wrote a thesis on the history of Martinsburg in 1930 for the degree of Master of Arts at the University of West Virginia. This work was developed into Chronicles of Old Berkeley by Mrs. Gardiner in collaboration with her daughter, Ann Henshaw Gardiner. Published in 1938, this history is based on the Ann H. Gardiner Papers and contains the diaries which Captain Levi and Hiram Henshaw kept on trips to Kentucky, ca. 1828-1830.

College and went into training in nursing at the Massachusetts General Hospital. She saw service in World War I in a United States Army base hospital in France.* In 1927 she wrote her thesis, "The Development of the External Form of the Squid Embryo," at Kansas State Agricultural College for the degree of Master of Science. With the manuscripts of this work are pamphlets and papers of Francis Noyes Balch on Cephalopods.

Broadsides and pamphlets refer to Berkeley County and its history, to estate sales in the county, to the Whig Party, to the militia, and

and to the Free masons.

Clippings pertain to family members and to the story of Martinsburg and West Virginia. A series of articles by B. F. Voegle on local history is also in clipping form.

Among the miscellaneous material is a manuscript arithmetic book, 1790-1791, which was used by Robert Snodgrass II.

The volumes contain a number of old account books and other records. Family data for the Snodgrasses is preserved in their Age Book, 1821-

1861, for each generation from William to Robert Verdier Snodgrass, as well as a list of the family slaves and their ages. Daybooks and farm books date from 1803 to the 1840's. Four postal card albums, an autograph album, and scrapbooks with many other miscellaneous volumes are in the collection.

At the end of the papers are two albums and two manuscript histories of the first ten years of the Duke University School of Nursing. Pictures, programs, invitations, and clippings in the first album document the beginning of the nursing program in 1930. In the second album are photographs of nursing and laboratory classes of the 1930's.

A number of letters, poems, and pamphlets, unmounted in albums, conclude the nursing papers. On December 27, 1934, the Duke University School of Nursing Alumnae Association was organized with a constitution. A reprint from the Southern Medical Association Journal contains the speeches made in April, 1931, at the dedication of the Medical School.

Among the pictures are a number of photographs of members of the various classes of the Nursing School. The Henshaw family is well illustrated by pictures of individuals, their homes, and antique furnishings.

For further details on this collection, see F. Vernon Aler, History of Martinsburg and Berkeley County, West Virginia; Willis F. Evans, History of Berkeley County West Virginia; and A. H. and M. H. Gardiner, Chronicles of Old Berkeley..

119 items and 9 vols., added 5-30-71, are letters, financial and legal papers, and scrapbooks and albums of the Henshaw, Snodgrass, and Gardiner families. Manuscripts of the early nineteenth century pertain to the settlement of estates, land transactions, and the hiring of Negro slaves and their disposition. The volumes center in nine scrapbooks and albums, five of which contain post cards of France and all of which are illustrative of the career of Miss Gardiner.

Personal, family and Civil War correspondence of Amanda E. (Edney) Gardner, of her husband, E. Gardner (full name not given), and of two of their children, Elizabeth A. Gardner and John A. Gardner.

The earliest letters in the collection are written by one Mary Serina Harris of Yorkville, S.C. to the young Amanda E. Edney, apparently herself a former resident of Yorkville, but removed to Edneyville, Buncombe Co., N.C. Several letters for the year 1833 are illustrative of the social life and customs of the day, and one, dated Sept. 12, alludes to the winning of an election by the "Nullifiers." Correspondence for 1836 indicates that Amanda removed to Pleasant Hill, Dallas County, Ala., and that for 1840 that Mary Harris was living in Florida in that year. A letter for July 20 of that year describes the Florida countryside and alludes specifically to dangers from Indians and possibilities which the climate afforded for the cultivation of fruits and flowers.

GARDNER -3-

Except that it reveals that at sometime between 1840 and 1842 Amanda married E. Gardner, the 1841-45 correspondence is of little consequence, being filled with platitudes and family gossip.

A letter of Dec. 1, 1854, and subsequent ones for 1855, indicate that Amanda's daughter, Elizabeth ("Lizzie") A. Gardner, was attending a girls' school at Talladega, Ala. An undated bill indicates that her school was the Presbyterian Female Collegiate Institute. Lizzie's letters are unfortunately meagre in their pictures of her daily life. Further correspondence for 1854 shows that Amanda was then settled with her family in Cahaba, Ala.

Letters from 1856 indicate the death of Elizabeth A. Gardner either in that year on the latter months of the one preceding, and reveal that Amanda's husband, E. Gardner, was employed in the Greenville, (Ala.), Land Office. Letters from the latter to his wife and children in Cahaba suggest that he worked as a clerk in this office and show something of the influence of politics in filling such positions.

So far as is shown in this collection, only one of the Gardner children - and several are mentioned in the letters - were involved in the Civil War. John A. Gardner was a member of Col. Robt. E. Rodes' 5th (possibly 6th, collection gives no definite indication) Ala. Regt. According to his letters to his family, he was action only in Va. during the first two years of the war. A letter, July 27, 1861, describes rather graphically a skirmish incident to the first battle of Bull Run, and one in which his regiment, as a part of Gen. R. S. Ewell's command stationed at Union Mills Ford on Bull Run,

GARDNER -5-

GARDNER -6-

was engaged. He closes this letter with an interesting sidelight on Confederate censorship: "Do not let the newspapers get any of this letter as it is against orders to have anything published." Succeeding letters ask for articles to be sent from home; describe soldiers' uniforms, fortifications, life in camp, prevalence of disease, and the construction of winter quarters in the fork of the Occoquan River and Bull Run; and discuss the election of regimental officers, amounts of army wages, and the relative advantages of re-enlisting or waiting to be conscripted. As the result of an injury received while he was helping to build winter quarters, John Gardner was, on May 2, 1862, in a Charlottesville, Va., hospital to which he confusingly refers as "Ivory Hospital, So. Ca." A letter dated June 14, 1862, written to his mother by one Dr. Thomas Hunter, a fellow-townsmen, tells of John's death in a recent engagement. From outside evidence, this engagement apparently was the battle of Seven Pines.

GARDNER -7-

With a single exception the few post-war letters are of little value. The exception is a letter dated Mar. 5, 1865, written to Mrs. Amanda E. Gardner by C. W. Hayes, a hospital steward of the 3rd Ill. Vol. Cavalry, thanking her for books which she had loaned him and his fellow prisoners at Fort Morgan, Mobile, Ala, and indicating that they ~~were~~ were about to be released.

The war letters, most important of the collection, give a rather good picture of Confederate army life as seen by a private soldier.

Vance at High Point and the disappointment over it. Most of the letters refer to family and friends.

This collection also contains the papers of the Kivett family of Missouri and N. C. who seem to have been friends of Caroline Gardner. There is a letter of June 4, 1857 to William Melzar Gardner was a journalist and agent for the distribution of several newspapers and journals, including Brother Jonathan, Democratic Review, Union and Messenger, Boston Quarterly Review, and Democratic Review. Some of the problems involved in publishing and distributing newspapers and periodicals and the tendency of many of them to be short-lived are evident from the letters addressed to Gardner.

In January 1841, Gardner began the publication of The Sunbeam in Hartford. It was a weekly journal devoted to the discussion and development of the principles of social democracy. It appears that this attempt to help the common man was of short duration although he had among his supporters Orestes Augustus Brownson. On November 25, 1841, Theophilus Fisk wrote to Gardner from Portsmouth, Va., inviting him to become the editor of a weekly newspaper in Richmond, Va., that would advocate a new state constitution, extension of the suffrage, election of all officers by the people, universal system of public education, and the rights of labor. Fisk said it would foster the interests of the farmers and mechanics and would be different from the "milk-and-water democratic journals" with which Virginia was "so grievously cursed." By January of 1842, Gardner was in Richmond and presumably was editing the State Rights Republican. Perhaps his stay in Richmond was brief, because on April 12 of that year a letter was posted to him in Rocky Hill, Conn. That is the last letter in the collection addressed to him.

In the second of two letters Orestes A. Brownson wrote to Gardner, encouraging him in his Richmond venture and saying that he had become sick of politics and was resorting to his old cause of reform through philosophy, literature, and religion.

Papers of Louis Garesché, son of Col. Julius Peter Garesché (1821-82), the famous soldier and founder of the Society of St. Vincent de Paul in Washington, D. C. Louis Garesché attended West Point (1875) and was in the army at San Antonio in 1879. After this date he seems to have lived in obscurity as a government clerk in Washington, D. C. But he busied himself writing a biography of his father (publ. in 1886) and in tracing the genealogy of his family. He corresponded with many French families whose forebears, like his own, had settled in the West Indies; and especially with Henri de LaPérouse (1826-1910), who was of the family of Jean Francois de LaPérouse (1741-88), famous French navigator and explorer. The letters (4) of Henri de LaPérouse are in French, and were written from Trinidad, 1893-1900. They mention in particular Dr. Gastin de Verteuil, a leader in the Catholic church there, and genealogy of the de Laferrière family (cf. letters of May 25, 1896 and Aug. 16, 1900). Other family names mentioned are:

Deschappelle, Guillon, Milhaw, and LeBreton. Garesché evidently also wrote to Baron Eugene Eschassériaux, former deputy to the National Assembly of France from the Department of Charente - Inférieure, for information concerning his family, (cf. incomplete letter of Eschassériaux, n. d.). There are also letters of Garesché to his sisters, who aspired to become nuns; and letters to Garesché from numerous Catholic priests and church officials in praise of his father. A letter (Oct. 1, 1895) of William Lockren concerns Garesché's

Garland, James. Papers, 1798-1881. Lynchburg, Campbell Co., Va. 215 items. Sketch

This collection deals chiefly with the James Garland family. The contents are composed mostly of business letters, mercantile accounts, bills, receipts, legal accounts and papers, and lawyers' correspondence and papers. The letters and legal papers range from 1804 to 1873. See also the Thomas Garland Papers in this department. The collection contains some information about Richard Newton Hewitt, M. D., Campbell Co., Va., and other Hewitts. More information about them is in the Richard Newton Hewitt

Garland, James

Papers in this department.

James Garland (1791 or 1792-1885) was a lawyer, judge, legislator, and public official. He was U. S. Representative from Va. (1835-1841); Commonwealth Attorney for Lynchburg (1849-1872); and Judge of the Corporation Court of Lynchburg. See Don Peters Halsey, Historic and Heroic Lynchburg (Lynchburg, 1935), pp. vi, vii, 134-144, and 154; and Rosa Faulkner Yancy, Lynchburg and It's [sic] Neighbors (Richmond, 1935), pp. 34, 111-113, 194, 214, 280 and 310-314.

William Brown, of Lynchburg, writes on

3

May 9, 1804, to William S. Crawford, near New Glasgow, Va., mentioning Maj. James Penn; Tate; Garland; and Mays. (Note: Crawford is probably an ancestor of Mrs. Indiana (Fletcher) Williams, founder of Sweet Briar College. See the Indiana (Fletcher) Williams Papers in this department. Crawford seems to be a brother of the Rev. Charles Crawford, Amherst Co., Va., and a first cousin to the Hon. William Harris Crawford of Ga.)

Spotswood Garland writes on May 12, 1804, to Wilson Davenport, an attorney of Lynchburg, mentioning personal debts, De Priest, Thomas Coleman, and James Shackelford.

Garland, James

William S. Crawford writes on Feb. 2, 1810, from the plantation of "Tusculum," Amherst Co., Va.

Various legal papers show debts and claims.

William Cabell Rives (1793-1868) discusses politics on May 9, 1829, from his plantation, "Castle Hill," Albemarle Co.

On Jan. 30, 1839, Apr. 1, 1840, and Feb. 12, 1841, James Whitcomb, Commissioner of the General Land Office, and Hudson M. Garland, Recorder of the General Land Office correspond on patents. Without naming him, the letters referred to President Martin Van Buren.

A document of Apr. 21 and May 1, 1845, is a pension application by William Bates (b. ca. 1764), a Revolutionary War veteran.

Two Reconstruction letters are of some political interest. William D. Dawe wrote in 1870 about Judge James Garland, the elections of 1869, Dr. Walker, Gen. Canby, etc. On Oct.

Garland, James

27, 1873, E. W. Early, Chairman of the Republican Executive Committee, wrote Judge Garland a letter about elections and the desirability (from the writer's viewpoint) of removing an election judge.

There is an undated letter from S. Garland to William S. Crawford, mentioning Messrs. Aldridge, Triplett, D. Carr (Dabney Carr ?), Cocke, Irvine, Taliaferro, Col. Ware, Daniel Warwick, and W. H. Cabell.

The collection contains a number of bills, receipts, and other business items.

The Henry St. George Harris Papers in this department contain information about some of the Garland family, including Miss Maggie Garland; Confederate Brig. Gen. Samuel Garland, Jr.; and the latter's mother.

This collection was originally a part of the Don Preston Peters Collection.

Although this collection centers largely around Thomas Garland who died in 1874, it also contains papers of other generations of this family.

A few of the early papers relate to Richard Morris, whose daughter, Elizabeth, married Edward Garland, the father of Thomas. An interesting paper of this set is the will of Martha Morris, also the daughter of Richard Morris, made Sept. 11, 1825, wherein she freed all her slaves

GARLAND, Thomas.

Sketch.

(2)

Evidently Martha Morris acted according to the example of her father who willed freedom and property in the West to some of his slaves. Apparently a branch of the Garland family also willed freedom and property to their slaves at about the same time that the Morrises did. The Garlands owned "Whit Hall" in Louisa Co., Va. and from that plantation the Garland Negroes were given land after having received their freedom. (See Malcolm Harris, A History of Louisa County, Va., Richmond, 1936, p.324). The Negro settlement which thus arose in Louisa Co. came to be called Garlandtown.

GARLAND, Thomas.

Ske tch.

(3)

Thomas Garland, around whom the collection centers, died in 1874, apparently an old man. As the accompanying chart indicates, there were seven children born to the union of Elizabeth Morris and Edward Garland. Only Thomas and James Maury are important characters in this set although there are frequent letters from Richard Edward, and his wife, who moved to Ky.; O. W. Kean who married Clarissa Garland, and Carris M. Callis who married Martha A. Garland. There are also many letters from various relatives.

The Garlands were born in Goochland Co., but

GARLAND, Thomas.

Sketch.

(4)

evidently moved from their native Co. when quite young. Apparently Richard Garland moved to Philadelphia, after having studied in Paris; Edward moved to Ky. as did Martha A. (Garland) Callis.

James Maury Garland and Thomas Garland were closely allied in business and politics, although they were seldom together personally. James Maury, in connection with one Binford, began a mercantile business in Charlottesville about 1833, but he soon moved to Richmond. It seems that Thomas Garland lived near Charlottesville, in Albemarle Co. some time in the 1820's, but apparently moved to Hanover Co. later where he was living in 1833. In 1835 Thomas Garland bought a splendid plantation, a part of the low grounds on Buck Island Creek. He was a magistrate in 1838. He was interested in political affairs and was connected with the American party in 1855, although he had been a Whig. Garland was an active promoter of railroad building in Va. during the 1850's. He was violently opposed to the Civil War and in 1859 received several letters from John Minor Botts regarding Bell, Crittenden, and the Va. Convention. He freed

GARLAND, Thomas.

Sketch.

(5)

GARLAND, Thomas.

Sketch.

(6)

seven of his slaves and gave each of them $100 to enable them to settle in Liberia or some free state. The correspondence also contains many references to political and agricultural articles which Garland wrote to the papers of Va. As might have been expected from Garland's views on slavery, he became a Republican after the Civil War. Judging from his correspondence, Garland was a man of choleric temper. In Edgar Wood's Albemarle County, Va. (p. 201) Thomas Garland is described as follows: "He was a man of unamiable temper and unsavory reputation."

GARLAND, Thomas.

Sketch.

(7)

The collection is valuable for many reasons. In the letters of James Maury Garland to his brother, Thomas, there are many analyses of the prices of staple products, especially tobacco. Many of the letters written by women connected with the Garland family give detailed accounts of the styles in dress during the first half of the 19th century. Antagonism to slavery, interest in state politics, and an effort to improve agriculture are all reflected in these letters.

This collection contains letters from various members of the Garnett family. The first James Mercer Garnett (1770-1843) was famous as an educator, legislator, and agriculturist. He was member of the Va. legislature and served two terms in Congress. His later years were devoted to promoting agriculture, and to conducting a private school at his residence. There are three letters from him to his wife, Mary Eleanor Dick Mercer.

Garnett, James Mercer Letters Sketch (2)

Their son, James Mercer Garnett, Jr. (1794-1824) was the father of Muscoe Russell Hunter, (1821-1864), Charles Fenton Mercer (1810-1886), and Theodore Stanford Garnett (1812-1885) and several other children. From 1827 to 1833 the letters of the collection are chiefly those which passed between Ann Garnett, and her brother, Theodore Stanford Garnett, who was at that time a college student. They are family letters containing many sisterly admonitions, particularly regarding piety. Theodore Stanford Garnett was educated to be an engineer, and while pursuing his profession married, in 1839, Florentina Isadora Moreno of Pensacola, Fla. Among thier children were James Mercer Garnett (1840-1916) and Theodore Stanford Garnett, Jr. (1844-1915). Both served in the Confederate army, and were educated at the University of Va. Theodore became a prominent lawyer of Norfolk.

James Mercer Garnett became a noted philologist and teacher. In 1869-1870 he went to Europe to study in the German universities. A series of letters, written to various members of his family, describe his travels and experiences in detail. This constitutes one of the most important portions of the collection, since it relates to the earlier years of American scholastic study abroad. James Garnett was president of St. Johns College (Annapolis) and professor of English at the U. of Va. Besides his philological writings, he gave much attention to his family's history and genealogy. The latter portion of the collection (1890-1916) consists chiefly of family letters on genealogical questions from William Robert Mercer of Doylestown, Pa., who was a great-grandson of John Mercer and Ann Roy, and grandson of John Francis Mercer (1759-1821).

The chief value of the collection lies in the importance of the persons and families involved. While many of the letters contain much interesting comment and information, none has great intrinsic value. The letters of James Mercer Garnett while a student in Germany have considerable importance for any study of intellectual history.

5 items added, 11-23-70: (transferred from the Henry St. George Tucker MSS.): Letters to Garnett from Henry St. George Tucker (1780-1848), congressman and jurist of Virginia. Written in 1808 and 1811, they contain comments on the administrations of Jefferson and Madison and on various issues and persons connected principally with American foreign policy. Tucker was particularly critical of Secretary of State Robert Smith (July 5, 1811) and of the poor state of military preparation for the war likely to result from the attitude of the American government towards Europe (October 7, 1811).

Garrison was apparently a private in the Union army, being in General Robert Huston Milroy's command. He was stationed in western Virginia where part of the time he was assigned to provost guard duty. He speaks of abundant rations and his general, satisfactory army life. Garrison was almost illiterate. The letters were addressed to his wife.

Garrison, William Lloyd. Papers. Roxbury,
Suffolk Co., Mass.

The papers of William Lloyd Garrison (1805-1879), the noted abolitionist and reformer, consist of letters to him from Hinton Rowan Helper and Aaron Macy Powell. On June 8, 1860, Helper wrote to notify Garrison that he was sending him copies of his book, Impending Crisis of the South, to be distributed to people in the Boston area. The letter from Powell is dated February 3, 1876, and is an expression of sympathy on the death of Mrs. Garrison. It had formerly been cataloged as a part of the New York Miscellaneous Papers since Powell, also an abolitionist and editor, had lived in that state.

Garrison, William Lloyd

2 items added, 1-7-83: Letter written by Beriah Green to William Lloyd Garrison perhaps shortly before it was published in The Liberator on Apr. 19, 1861, and a clipping from that newspaper carrying Green's letter and the editor's response to it in which he supports President Lincoln in his determination to preserve the Union. In his letter Green, a noted reformer and abolitionist, takes the position that John Brown's uprising was a legitimate protest against a morally treasonous government. He asserts that the Secessionists and the supporters of the Union are in "deadly warfare with Humanity," and that "Treason was and is the demon of Virginian Society." He asks permission to publish his remarks in Garrison's newspaper.

HENRY AND JOHN GARST
Roanoke County, Va.

Papers 1830-1867
155 items and 4 v.

Henry and John Garst were mill operators in Roanoke County, Va. Henry owned a sawmill and a flour mill and John owned a sawmill. Just exactly what their relation was is not clarified by the papers, but it is probably that they were brothers.

John Garst's papers comprise the first part of the set, being personal and household accounts from 1830 to 1849. The Henry Garst material is more interesting. The papers are of the Civil War period and include a petition (Nov. 1864)

from the citizens of Roanoke County to James A. Seddon, Confederate Secretary of War, requesting that Henry be released from military service to operate his flour mill; a sixty day detail of Henry as a miller in Roanoke Co., Jan 4, 1865; Tax in Kind assessments on Henry and receipts for their payment; notice, Jan. 11, 1865, of the impressment of his mill for "grinding military supplies"; and rationing slips given to civilians by the Confederate agent for Roanoke county by which they might get flour and corn from Henry's mill.

GARST -3-

The four volumes are two account books for Henry's flour mill, 1850-67, 1854-58; one for his flour mill and sawmill, 1860-67; and a ledger for his flour mill, 1864-67.

Garwood, Alfred Edward. Papers. Newport,
Monmouthshire, England

Alfred Edward Garwood, a British mechanical engineer, was the son of Robert Garwood who was twice mayor of Arundel, Sussex. After an apprenticeship of six years in the shops of the London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway, he went to Russia in the 1860's at the age of twenty-two. There he served successively as: assistant master mechanic at Bologoe for the third division of the Nicolai Railway (St.

Garwood, Alfred Edward

Petersburg to Moscow); assistant locomotive superintendent of the Dunaburg Witepsk Railway (1869); chief engineer-in-charge of the construction of locomotives at the Baltic Ironworks, St. Petersburg; manager of the shops at Globuki; manager of locomotive service at Novi-Tcherkash; works manager of the Kolomna Engineering Works (Messrs. Struve Brothers) near Moscow; district locomotive superintendent at Orel for the Orel-Graize Railway; and engineer-in-chief of the Locomotive, Carriage, and Wagon Departments of the Losova-Sevastopol Railway. In 1877 he moved to Egypt where he worked until 1882 as head of the Locomotive, Carriage, and Wagon Departments of the Egyptian Government Railways. His memoirs often lack dates so that the dating of his various jobs in Russia is uncertain. He returned to England in 1884, supervised work on the docks at Newport, Monmouthshire, 1886-1892, and then went into private practice there as a consulting engineer.

Garwood described his career in Russia and Egypt in Forty Years of an Engineer's Life At Home and Abroad, With Notes By the Way (Newport, Monmouthshire, 1903). A manuscript volume is a draft of chapters XVII-XLV of the book that has fifty-two chapters. The manuscript covers the period from the Kolomna Engineering Works through the employment on the Egyptian railroads. It includes a major part of the Russian narrative in which he described his work during the construction of the Losova-Sevastopol Railway that opened the Crimea to rail transportation. In this endeavor he was associated with Major Nicolai Yakovlevitch Prochoroff, engineer-in-chief and general manager of the railroad. Garwood encountered difficulties in Egypt that derived in part from the political turmoil there so that he commented on governmental affairs.

The manuscript closely follows the published text, but there are many variations. It is apparently not the final draft. Pages 1-74

The Martin Witherspoon Gary Papers are based on the former South Carolina Reconstruction Papers. A lawyer before the Civil War, Martin W. Gary became a Confederate brigadier-general. This part of his career is not found in the papers. Four documents in Nov., 1876, are protests against election irregularities in Edgefield County by Republican and Negro voters. On March 30, 1877, Gary wrote to the editors of the Augusta Chronicle and Constitutionalist giving his reasons for opposing Southern Democratic acceptance of appointments from President Rutherford B. Hays. The papers contain accusations against Gary, M.C. Butler, Wade Hampton, Daniel H. Chamberlain, and the "Democratic News and Courier." The last manuscript in the group is a letter to the editor of the Abbeville Medium which opposes the election of Wade Hampton to the United States Senate.

Gassmann, Florian Leopold. Papers, 18th Century. Vienna, Austria

Florian Leopold Gassmann (1729-1774), Bohemian conductor and composer, had a distinguished career in Vienna. See Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians.

Three manuscript music scores are entitled:

1. Sei Fughe a Tre, Violoncello;
2. Sei Fughe a Tre, Violino I;
3. Sei Fughe a Tre, Violino II.

There are actually twelve fugues in each score.

These twelve fugues for string trio are in the keys of G, c-minor, E-flat, B-flat, g-minor, D, A, E, C, f-minor, F, and d-minor. They were never published. Four manuscripts that contain the same twelve fugues are cataloged in Warren Kirkendale, Fuge und Fugato in der Kammermusik des Rokoko und der Klassik (Tutzing, 1966), p. 32.

The manuscript was apparently written by a professional copyist in the second half of the Eighteenth Century.

Major General Sir William Forbes Gatacre (1843-1906) of the British army served in India, Burma, the Sudan, and South Africa. He commanded a division during the operations in the Sudan that resulted in the capture of Omdurman on Sept. 2, 1898. His letter of Sept. 16 was a description of the battle, Omdurman, and the Mahdi's tomb, of which there is a drawing on page four. His wife's trip to Egypt was noted in this letter to her sister, Mildred Davey,

Addison W. Gates was an attorney in Macedon, N.Y. He ran unsuccessfully for the state legislature in 1879 and was elected the following year. In addition to letters concerning family and business matters, Gates's papers contain much correspondence on politics in New York. In 1879 and 1880, Gates sought an appointment as clerk to several of the legislature's standing committees. After his election to the assembly, he received many requests from men seeking appointments as notaries public.

Of particular interest are the papers concerning politics in 1881 and 1894. Roscoe Conkling and Thomas Collier Platt resigned their Senate seats on May 14, 1881. Gates, as a member of the state assembly, participated in the election of successors to these two men. His papers include letters from both factions of the Republican party, but those favoring the re-election of Conkling and Platt are more numerous. Several excellent clippings pertain to the gubernatorial campaign of 1894.

Speeches, notes, and random comments on various issues and politicians are scattered among the miscellany. The volume, a notebook of quotations and short comments, also contains a few references of political interest.

Mainly personal letters to William Gault, of Hookset, N. H., from his sons, William and Sylvanus B. Gault, and his nephews, n. and W. W. Cochran.

William and James Gault went to Cal., and Sylvanus B. Gault to Ill. James returned from Cal. and settled in the midwest, but William remained in Cal., living in several places.

Sylvanus became a railroad freight agent, and in the course of his career worked in Ill. and Iowa for several railroad companies. He served for a while in the Army of the Potomac, in Washington, D. C., and in the siege of Yorktown, Va. He comments upon the American ("Know Nothing") party which he hates; Stephen A. Douglas, Gen. G. B. McClellan; a rumor (Aug., 1861) that there are much sickness and a serious shortage of medical supplies in the Confederate Army; a rumor(false) that Jefferson Davis had been captured in ladies' clothing; Abraham Lincoln's reputation; the Radicals; Andrew Johnson; and the Copperheads.

Gault, Matthew

There are a few letters from D. L. Macurdy,

Gault, Matthew

who had gone from N. H. to Franklin, Ill., where he was employed by the American Express Co.

James Cochran, perhaps Matthew Gault's brother-in-law, writes to him on Feb. 26, 1842, and May 27, 1845, from Austin Co., Tex. In the first letter he discusses a fire, cotton planting, the immigration to the Republic of Texas of many wealthy southern U. S. planters, livestock, the visit of a N. H. Methodist preacher, and an act by the Texas legislature prohibiting debt collection. In the second letter he discusses land, cotton, and immigration to Texas.

N. and W. W. Cochran wrote from 1860 to 1867, but said little about the Civil War, except for one good letter of 1861. On Jan. 10, 1860, N. Cochran mentions a yellow fever epidemic in Tex. during the previous year. Party feelings have died and even John Brown is hardly mentioned. The abolitionists are as active as ever, almost. The Harper's Ferry raid has caused much ill feeling from the South to the North.

A fragmentary letter of 1861 by W. W. Cochran denounces and ridicules Lincoln's policy of calling for 75,000 troops after the fall of Ft.

5

Sumter. Secession, he argues, is ordinarily wrong, but right under the prevailing circumstances. He undertakes to explain an important but seldom explained point in American history: why should the South secede in 1861 when congress (with a majority of Democrats) and the Supreme Court would oppose abolition? The South has no assurance that abolition will end in four years and abolitionists have increased in numbers during past years. The South will never be abler than now to fight for its rights. While slavery, as matters stand, cannot be med-died with to a great extent for years, the prosperity of the South can be held in check by the Republican Party, which desires abolition. How long will it be until its desires are accomplished?

The new C. S. government has advantages over the old U. S. government, continues Cochran. The U. S. has not protected Texas from numerous Indian depredations occurring every year. Texas Rangers often have been sent as guides for U. S. troops pursuing the Indians. The Fugitive Slave Law has benefited Texas little. When it has been enforced, the cost has amounted to as much as the value of the slave. The personal liberty laws in force in a number of the free states directly deny the validity of the Fugitive Slave Law. There has never been a slave insurrection that was not instigated by some abolitionist. Cochran declares that he cannot give his allegiance to a flag that will not guarantee his constitutional rights.

He goes on to quote W. H. Seward as saying that the Republican platform of 1860 had accomplished all it was intended to do and should be thrown aside as an old fossil. The South, says Cochran, will not approve such an argument. He discusses the Civil War in Kansas, denounces Northern and Southern politicians, declares that some northern schools teach abolition, and hopes that there will be no war, but will fight on the side of Texas if there is one.

Gault, Matthew

J. D. Cochran writes on Feb. 27, 1866, from Hempstead, Texas, to his uncle, Matthew Gault. He had fought for four years in the 8th Regt. of Tex. Cav. (also known as the Tex. Rangers) without a wound, save a mere scratch. He mentions other relatives who served in the war; federal prisoners; federal army depredations; personal debts; and C. S. Gen. H. H. Sibley. He discusses cotton planting, cotton taxes, and former Negro slaves in Texas. The freedmen, he says, are said by everybody to be worthless, but they are in great demand, and receiving "very heavy wages" ($15 per month for first class hands), though it takes a third more hands than it did with slaves. the scarcity of cotton has raised its price, but many acres of cotton land will be idle, because labor is scarce. He denounces Andrew Jackson ("Jack") Hamilton, the Provisional Governor of Texas, as a "renegade."

W. W. Cochran writes on April 27, denouncing Hamilton, the Republican ("Radical") Party, the Texas general elections to be held in June, and President Andrew Johnson's Peace Proclamation. The "Radical Party" in Texas, he says is small, weak, and composed mostly of naturalized Americans of German descent.

Other letters discuss some of the above subjects, as well as the Freedman's Bureau, immigration to Texas, and the growth of manufactur-

GAYARRÉ , Charles Étienne Arthur.      Letters.
New Orleans, La.

Gayarre' (1805-1859) was born in New Orleans, educated at the College of Orleans, studied law, resided in France for several years, and became a writer, chiefly of history. From 1845 to 1855 he was active in Louisiana politics. After the war he lived in literary poverty. [See D. A. B. VII, 196]. These letters are chiefly acknowledgments of addresses received from C. C. Jones.

Of three pieces added Feb. 20, 1942, two are autographletters. The first, dated May 25, 1882, is an account from the hand of Gayarre to his friend John Dimitry on the enthusiastic reception of the former's lecture on "Episodes of the French Revolution".

The second is concerned with the selling of cypress timber on Gayarre's property. In the letter he refers to his straitened financial condition.

The third piece is a broadside advertising the cypress timber.

One item transferred from the C. C. Jones books Sept. 1, 1944, is an acknowledgement of Jones' article on Wilde.

2 items added 11-5-51. These are letters of Gayarré to C. Grant Wilson and T. Henry Hager. To Wilson he writes about a photograph of himself that he is enclosing, and to Hager he suggests how he may obtain biographical data on Joseph P. Newsham and one Monette.

1 item added 3-27-58 is a letter by Gayarré to Col. J. F. H. Claiborne, commenting on the publication of Claiborne's History of Mississippi. Gayarré implies he will move permanently to New Orleans about Dec. 1, 1879.

Gayarré, Charles Étienne Arthur

1 item added, 6-26-73: Letter dated March 28, 1886, from Gayarré to George T. Heath in Monroe, Michigan. Gayarré wrote of the various publishers of his History of Louisiana and about a four-volume edition of it.

1 item added, 1-3-74: Letter of Jan. 17, 1895, from Gayarré to Ashley T. Cole of Brooklyn, N. Y. Cole, a stranger to Gayarré, but one who appreciated his writings, wrote to congratulate him on his 90th birthday, and Gayarré responded graciously as well as philosophically in this last month of his life.

Five members of a very interesting family are represented in this collection. They are the elder Mrs. Gaylord, Mother of John D., James, and William. William's wife, Juliette (Hyde) Gaylord is represented by the letters written to her by the other four members of the family and several acquaintances in addition.

The first letter in the collection is from the elder Mrs. Gaylord and gives a full account of a local political controversy which inevitably ~~Broadened~~ into the national Democratic-Republican struggle.

GAYLORD-2-

The letters which follow are from John D. Gaylord of Company "D" of the 21st Conn. Vols. He saw most of his service in Maryland and Va., and wrote interestingly of army life and of the countryside there.

William Gaylord was a minister, but the fact is not obvious from his letters. They are singularly devoid of the religious platitudes typical of the preachers' letters at that time. A most amusing letter of Mar. 30, 1864, describes his visit to his brother James in the 1st Conn. Cav. near Morton's Ford on the Rapidan River.

James, Wm's. brother, has only one letter in the collection. It was written June 10, 1864, from Hampton Hospital, Va., where he had gone suffering from exposure and a type of neuralgic affliction. Upon recovery he was kept there as one of the nurses for the hordes of wounded pouring in.

Juliette Gaylord was a member of the North East Women's Auxiliary Association of the United States Sanitary Commission. In this capacity she received a letter (Sept. 3, 1862), from Alfred Hitchcock describing the best process for making lint for bandages and several letters from branch chairmen reporting the progress of the Association.

GAYLORD -4-

This collection consists mainly of the letters of Noah L. Gebbart, Sr. to his family and of his oldest son, E. Martin. Noah went from Ottumwa to Cal. perhaps during the gold rush. He engaged in mining lead and quartz and maybe gold, but it seems that he never made much money. His family remained in Iowa. He tried his luck in Nevada, Yuba, Amador, and Mono counties, Cal. In 1862 he was mortally wounded by a man, who was never brought to trial. When he was imprisoned for the murder in a jail that Gebbart had built as a contractor, he escaped and was not recaptured. Letters written by some of Gebbart's masonic brothers, one of them signed by Gebbart, give the information about his murder and the murderer.

Noah Gebbart, Sr. and his wife Martha had eight children: Elizabeth, Sarah, Martin, Anna Mariah, Geo. Washington, Noah, Ellen, and Manford.

The correspondence of E. Martin Gebbart starts in 1860. In his first letter he relates in some detail his observation of Cassius M. Clay. In 1861 he enlisted in the 15th Regt. of Iowa Vols. From Keokuk he went to La Fayette, Tenn. He engaged in the battle of Shiloh, and sometime in 1862 was captured. He was soon exchanged, and in Jan. 1863 was at Milliken's Bend on the Miss. R. where a large force was being gathered to attack Vicksburg. In Feb. he was stationed in La. near Vicksburg. On May 17 he was at Grand Gulf, and on June 11 he wrote from a position in the rear of Vicksburg, giving an interesting description of the shelling of that town. It appears that he remained in the Vicksburg area until he left with Sherman's army on Feb. 3, 1864 which marched to Meridian and back to Vicksburg by the first of Mar. Then he received a furlough and went home for a visit. In July, 1864, he engaged in the Atlanta campaign and was killed on the 22nd of that month. Brig. Gen. W.W. Belknap and J. S.

Porter, a friend of Martin, wrote his mother about his death.

Martin's brother, Noah L., Jr., was in service with him. He survived the war and became a businessman.

The principal subjects treated in these papers other than family matters and those already mentioned are: Food, amusements, and Negro troops in the Federal army; Confed. guerrillas around La Fayette, Tenn.; commodity prices in Cal.; Knights of the Golden Circle in

Consists of negatives; contact sheets; proofs; prints; slides; indexes; handmade, illustrated books; journals; notebooks; and diaries dating from the 1950's to 1984. The collection documents Gedney's work as a photographer and his bookbinding expertise and interests. The photographs primarily document life in the United States, particularly in New York, rural Kentucky, and San Francisco; life in India, particularly and American composers. In particular, his U.S. subjects include gays in New York, Myrtle Avenue in Brooklyn, and hippies in San Francisco. Two themes in Gedney's oeuvre are his "Night" series and nudes. The "Night" series was created throughout most of Gedney's career and spanned all geographic locations. The nudes were primarily photographed at the Pratt Institute where Gedney taught. The handmade books were designed and made by Gedney and are illustrated with his photographic prints. Gee, James T. MSS. 1837-1864 Selma, Ala.

James T. Gee was educated in medicine at Philadelphia and at the University of Virginia under Dr. Mutter. Letters from his father contain comments on the panic of 1837, and the elections of 1840 and 1844. Gee was a surgeon in the Confederate Army and saw active service. A letter from him from Fort Morgan, Ala. bears the date Aug. 6, 1864.

Gee Family Papers. Wilcox Co., Ala. and Halifax Co., N.C.

The older members of the Gee family resided in Halifax C., N.C. Of them, Col. Nevill Gee figures chiefly in this correspondence. His brother, Joseph Gee, had gone to Ala. in 1816 or earlier, where he was apparently engaged extensively in cotton planting. Nevill Gee, it appears, also owned one or more plantations in Alabama, which were under the supervision of Joseph. In Nov., 1824, Joseph Gee died suddenly, leaving a large estate (including forty-seven Negroes) intestate. Nevill's son Sterling Gee, immediately went to Ala. to take care of his father's plantations and administer his deceased uncle's estate. The early letters refer to the business devolving from these circumstances. Sterling's brother, Charles, was also in Ala., where at one time he was teaching school. Sterling apparently remained in Ala. for an indefinite period, looking after his family's interests there, and speculation somewhat in lands on his own account. The later letters deal almost entirely with business matters & law suits.

The letters are chiefly valuable for their comments on early settlement in Ala., prices of lands, slaves, and cotton, crops, financial status, and the economic structure in general.

The relation between these members of the Gee family and James T. Gee of Selma and Madison Co. Ala., is not clear; hence the two collections have been kept separate. It is probable that they are branches of the same family, but the relationship does not appear in these papers.

Gennett, Andrew, IV. Autobiography, 1938-1939.
Asheville, Buncombe Co., N.C. 2 vols. Sketch

These volumes, written in 1938-39, are the reminiscences of Andrew Gennett IV of Asheville, N.C. He writes of his life and family history. He was a pioneer lumberman in N.C., S.C., Ga., and Tenn. Information on all phases of the lumber business is given. He has a habit of doubling back in his story, so it is a little confusing. He had a great dislike for the New Deal and comments on it throughout the volumes.

Vol. I., pp. 1-10 describe early life in Nashville, Tenn., including his schooling at

GEORGE, Furniaful                      Letters                      1861-77
Doctor Town, Wayne County, Ga.    41 pieces

Letters from four brothers, John, Asa, Furniaful, and David George, in the 47th Ga. Vols., to their sisters and father in Doctor Town, Ga. In form and spelling the letters are typically lower middle class and contain the usual references to poor food and hardships of the soldier's life.

John George seems to have been the only brother who saw service outside of Ga. He was in Mississippi in the latter years of the war and gives an account of his activities there in a brief sketch in the undated material.

A few letters in the 1870s are from feminine friends of the George girls, Milly and Pheraby. Most of them are written from Brunswick, Ga., and from Lake City, Fla., but contain little useful information.

One of the letters, May 5, 1864, contains a folk-song or poem.

George III, King of Great Britain (1738-1820).
Papers, 1773-1806. London, England.

This collection consists of two business letters.

The first letter, dated January 19, 1773, is a King's warrant. Written by Lord North, Groonslow [?], and Jeremiah, it orders the treasury Commissioners to pay 400 pounds to one Thomas Pratt.

The second letter, written by George III to the Head Department of Royal Stables on July 1, 1806, refers to the death of Vom Dem Bussche,

George III, King of Great Britain (1738-1820) 2
Master of the King's Horse, and announces the sale of some of the stable's superfluous horses.

1 item added, 10-20-69: A facsimile of a petition from the American colonies to George III, July 8, 1775. Known as the "Olive Branch Petition," this document asked the King to rescind the acts of Parliament which had aroused so much opposition in the colonies.

This item was formerly cataloged as a part of the Revolutionary War Collection.

Georgia ~~Miscellaneous~~. Papers, 1727-1905.

V.p. in Georgia, 3189 items. Sketch

The Georgia Miscellaneous Papers include an initial collection to which 1137 items from the Marmaduke Floyd Manuscripts have been added. This miscellaneous group covers Georgia Colony Papers, 1727-1776, Georgia Revolutionary Papers, 1776-1783; and Georgia State Papers, 1783-1947; Georgia Legal Records; and Georgia Militia Records. In the state papers is a collection of Georgia Civil War letters, 1861-1865.

The miscellaneous papers begin in 1727 with those of James Oglethorpe, continue with John Perceval, Earl of Egmont, President of the Trustees of the Colony of Georgia, and Benjamin Martyn, Secretary. An anonymous letter, Dec. 10, 1744, to Egmont refers to a trustees' meeting on the tyrannical conduct of Major Wm. Morton in the Georgia Administration.

The War of ' Jenkins' Ear in 1739-42 has four documents. The first is anonymous "Proposal" addressed to the King for waging war in Georgia and Florida, including the use of Creeks, Cherokees, and Chicksaws, and presumably dictated by James Oglethorpe. The second is dated Feb. 1, 1742 and is a petition by holders of Oglethorpe's bills <sup>of</sup> exchange for the Spanish War. The third, a petition dated July, 1742, by Ga. merchants for redress for vessels and supplies lost in the Spanish War on the Island of St. Simon's, is signed by George Dunbar, Aaron Franks, and many others. The fourth is an account by Patrick Sutherland of the invasion of Georgia by the Spanish in 1742. The Sutherland manuscript relates much of the activity of James Oglethorpe and lists Spanish troops, including a regiment of Negroes. The commission for two companies of rangers for Ga. comes on Sept. 9, 1748, from George II and is signed by Middlesex, G. Lyttleton, and J.C. Legge. A memorial of the Trustees ca. 1745-48 reveals measures for defense for Georgia combined with land grants to soldiers.

Accounts, indentures, land grants, petitions, etc., relative to the early history of the colony, its government, the trustees, and defense are included in the papers. Frederica in 1747 is described to refute rumors by malcontents. Henry Parker is made Commissioner of the Indian Trade in 1750 and President of the Province in 1751. Also in 1751 James Crockatt, Agent for South Carolina, petitions the Earl of Holderness on financing the defense of the Southern frontier, emphasizing the necessity for gifts to keep the Indians peaceful. The Harman Verelst accounts for the Trustees in 1751-52 mention silk culture promotion, the sola bills of exchange issued by the trustees, and conclude accounts as the Ga. charter is surrendered to the King. The Trustees in a petition to the King give reasons why Ga. should not become a part of South Carolina. Henry Parker, President of the Colony makes his will, July 11, 1752. Financial affairs continue prominent. Patrick Graham, Governor of the Province, signs a bond concerning the Fraser Estate in 1755.

Ga. becomes a royal province in 1754. A photograph of the signatures of the Governors of Georgia begins in 1754 with Reynolds and continues through Clarence Walker, ca. 1926. A <sup>modern</sup> copy of a plat of the city of Savannah in 1757 shows a walled town. Grants of land in large tracts now become the practice, as the old restrictions on holdings are abolished. Henry Ellis and Jas. Wright sign deeds. Miscellaneous accounts and estate records begin in the late 1760's. Two facsimiles of Button Gwinnett appear, both dated 1773.

The miscellaneous material on Revolutionary Ga. begins with an old photograph of the signatures of the members of the Continental Congress, Nov. 9, 1775, which includes Archibald Bulloch and John Houston. An account of the money paid by the Committee appointed for paying militia from the western parishes lists captains of companies and one battalion of Col. Mann and is signed by George Walton, John Houstoun, and Wm. Ewen, et al. An account is also included for services to prisoners of war in Savannah in 1777. Business affairs continue during the war; papers include claims for services and property used by the Continental forces and taken from plantation owners. In 1782 John Simpson writes to Lord Sydney of the condition of Loyalists in Ga.; an undated photostat of a plat of ~~Darien~~, Ga., completes Brunswick, this group of papers.

Georgia Miscellaneous.

The papers dealing with the State of Georgia begin in 1783 with the aftermath of the Revolution. The Georgia merchants (who owed debts to British merchants) and the State of Georgia became involved in complicated financial arrangements regarding debts incurred before the Revolution. An undated MS. discusses the situation from the standpoint of Ga. legislation. A list of moneys due Ga. and its citizens by the United States, 1782-1784, shows large amounts owed to Lachlan McIntosh, James product of Ga. ~~P~~ Kean writes of Savannah, Ga., in 1791 to Robert Hobart of Philadelphia, describing its climate, people, and politics. John Bolton writes in 1800 of trade conditions in St. Sebastian, Spain. Mercantile accounts come from Columbia Court House in 1801 and from Augusta in 1806. In 1820 James Hogg disposes of his slaves among his family. A copy of the will of Martha Asbury of Green Co., made in 1818, is given in a letter of Richard Asbury. Candidates for office in Liberty County are listed ca. 1835. Many miscellaneous letters, social and business, are included at this period. Blanket and slave lists appear in 1850-51.

The miscellaneous papers, 1861-1865, include Confederate letters and county legal papers. A photostatic copy of the Ga. Ordinance of Secession begins the papers. Business letters, receipts, habeas corpus, confiscated property, substitutes, loss of relatives in service, medical supplies, and many incidental details are in the papers. Soldiers' letters. U. S. and C. S. A., are both included, mentioning sickness, camp food, the battle at Fredericksburg, leaves, exchange of prisoners, supplies, etc.

Miscellaneous letters and business papers after the War include many social letters. A copy of a letter, Oct. 18, 1866, from Dr. Salathiel E. Edgeworth of Houston County relates the Whig Party's opposition to secession, its following the State of Ga. in the Civil War, consequent economic hardships and losses, labor difficulties, and private financial problems. Financial hardships are reflected in the late 1860 letters. A number of these papers from Columbus, Rome, and Atlanta, Ga., appear in this period. A parade at Wesleyan College commencement ca. 1870 described by an anonymous writer gives a caricature of Ga. reconstruction. Atlanta, now the capital, has a number of minor government letters. Clippings from the Weekly News, Sept. 27, 1872, Albany, Ga., give the Democratic ticket for Ga., the Cincinnati platform of the Democrats, and Horace Greeley's speech accepting the Democratic nomination to the Presidency. A bank book of Jas. Ross in the Freedman's Savings & Trust Co. of Savannah in 1873 gives banking

rules. The miscellaneous papers of the 1870's deal with the Atlantic and Gulf R.R., Baptist and Methodist affairs, and the U.S. Census of 1880. A clipping lists members attending the United Confederate Veterans meeting at Atlanta, Ga., in Oct., 1908. A document by Fels & Co. of Philadelphia reports on financial conditions in the U.S. in Nov. 1907, mentioning Atlanta and Savannah in particular. A letter signed "Harley" in Aug., 1917, describes the Reserve Officers' Training Corps at Harvard University. The NRA is described in 1933 in a circular of the President's Emergency Re-Employment Committee of Savannah.

The miscellaneous papers include documents signed by Jonathan Bryan, Joseph Clay, Samuel Elbert, John Martin, George Walton, James Wright, George Dunbar, John Rae, Richard Milledge, Hugh Ross, John M. Bolzius, Andrew Maybank, Richard Wyllly, Thos. Corwin, Levi D'Lyon, H. K. Preston, Arthur Hood, B. H. Fry, Rufus Bullock, W. T. T. Dyer, Henry McDaniel, J. B. Gordon, A. D. Candler, and J. M. Terrell.

A few undated papers are followed by a number of typed MSS. dealing with the history of Ga. in colonial and early federal days. These documents are copies of early histories of Ga. by Arthur and Carpenter, Chappell, and George Gilmer, of executive papers and speeches on Yazoo and the War of 1812; and of documents on E. Florida.

The miscellaneous legal papers contain many Inferior and Superior Court papers as well as summonses, writs, petitions, papers of administration, and estate records. Three items of Georgia colonial legal papers and one item from the Chatham County legal papers are in Cabinet 106--SS40. The will of Luke Mann, 1800, is from Bryan Co. Among the many land deeds, and sales recorded is a group of early ones from Washington, Burke, Camden, Effingham, Cobb, Fannin, and Liberty counties.

On Oct. 26, 1865, Dr. James Bryan is appointed by Butts County to attend to Negroes who have smallpox, form hospitals, and furnish sustenance at county expense. This county prohibited the sale of intoxicating beverages to "any free person of color" in April of 1865. Camden County contains references to the port of St. Mary's; and land surveys here are typical of many Ga. counties. Many commissions of office given by Ga. governors to county officials are scattered through these papers. The Effingham Co. manuscripts concern chiefly the German Lutherans who settled in the Ebenezer district. (For additional MSS. on these Salzburgers, see the Zitterauer Papers.) Interesting claims are made in 1871 against the U.S. from Liberty and Effingham counties for depredations by the U.S.

Army. The will of Russell Jones of Franklin County is dated 1827. A number of Superior Court records from Greene Co. run from 1825.

In 1847 a paper relating details of the Cherokee Indian Land Lottery comes from Houston County. Henry County has a reference to the Eatonton Female Academy.

References to the public school system begin about 1824 in Irwin Co. with a form for a bond for money from the "Poor School" fund. From Lumpkin County, 1837-39, come the accounts of Philip Mulkey's "Poor School" there.

Many references to slaves are scattered through the counties. Sales, Purchases, and division of estate (slaves) are mentioned. In 1787 a presentment by the Grand Jury of Liberty County protests the neglect in the Sunbury districk of the road patrol, with resulting injurious conduct of Negroes. From McIntosh comes ~~the~~ will of Thomas Bradford in 1803. Richmond County Superior Court Papers are included, together with marriage settlements, estate records, a slave sale in 1851, and papers of the Court of Common Pleas. From Walton County comes an agreement in 1865 between planter and freedmen for working land.

The Chatham County legal papers comprise the largest group of legal papers for any one county. They are a miscellaneous collection of summonses, deeds and indentures, agreements petitions, law cases, estate and administration manuscripts, mortgages, warrants, judgments, bills of sale of slaves, and tax and road levies from Savannah, Ga., and Chatham Co. Before the Civil War many papers of the Sixth District U. S. Circuit Court appear with the names of Richard Stiles, Wm. B. Bulloch, Robert Habersham, and other well known Georgia lawyers. An interesting protest by the Grand Jury, May 20, 1821, to the Circuit Court petitions against violations of the prohibition of the African slave trade. A few papers of the city of Savannah contain the R. R. Cuyler signature as city clerk, and Thomas Charlton's as mayor on Sept. 15, 1819. The Court of Common Pleas and the Superior and Inferior courts are included. From 1865 the Fifth Dist. U. S. Circuit Court for the southern dist. of Ga. receives petitions for admission to legal practice with signed test oaths. At the end of the papers is an undated (ca. 1810) inventory of Jacob Waldburger's plantations, with slaves enumerated and evaluated as well as household furniture.

Confederate legal papers from various Ga. counties deal with crimes, jail sentences, road patrols, minors in C. S. A. service, property, exemptions, etc., as these came before the Inferior and Superior courts. The will of Richard D. B. Taylor of Clarke County, Ga., is recorded in 1864.

The Georgia Militia Records are from

Clarke and Chatham counties. The Clarke County records run from 1811 to 1827 and consist chiefly of excuses for not serving, failures to attend muster, courts of inquiry, lists of officers and men, and affidavits of allegiance. The Chatham County records are of the First Volunteer Regt. of Ga., which, except during the Spanish-American War, was known as the Irish Jasper Greens. While this regt. was part of the U. S. Army in 1898 they were called the First Ga. Infantry U. S. Vols. From 1872 until at least 1889, John Flannery was commander of 1 item added 8-4-58: An undated newspaper clipping about Georgia history.

40 items added, 8-21-62, land deeds from various counties with two of the items goingt into the Georgia Colonial Papers. These deeds c contain the signatures of many of the governors of Georgia.

3 items added 7-12-62 an unsigned draft of a business letter, Feb. 20, 1785, from Savannah to Charles Blackford of Charleston, S.C.; a letter by George Sibbald, May 2, 1803, concerning settlement and a store at the mouth of the "Ogechie" River; and a 1795 bill of lading for U.S. Army supplies shipped to Savannah, Ga.

162 items added, 6-13-62, to the Georgia Papers. One item, dated 1746, added to the Georgia Colony Papers, concerns a negro named Peter, who evidently was deeding "premises" to Joseph Jackson. Signed by Ezra Stiles and Thomas Redington. One item added to the Georgia Revolutionary MSS. The additions to the County Papers are Franklin County Court Records, 1783-1853; various land deeds; Confederate elections in Upson County on Oct. 7, 1863, in which Joseph Brown runs for governor. Additions to the Miscellaneous Papers contain a protest against slavery, Sept. 30, 1805, sent by "Shiloh" to the Governor of Georgia. Many family and business letters contain correspondence by Louis Le Conte, John W. Sanford, A. R. McLaughlin, John A. W. Sanford, James Henry Neal, Herman Talmadge, Wm. Gibbs McAdoo, F. W. Riley, W. A. Turner, C. F. Newton, and W. E. Trenholm. A letter of 1926 discusses the candidacy of Senator Henry Duncan Fletcher as viewed by the Ku Klux Klan.

1 item, added 3-18-63, is a letter by Louis LeConte of Riceborough, Ga., to his son Wm.

at Athens, Ga., reminding him to bring minerals and plants. This letter was transferred from the Don Preston Peters MSS.

6 items added, 12-27-66 (transferred from the Revolutionary Collection): Papers relevant to the early government of Georgia. A document dated Nov. 9, 1782, is a flag of truce granted by Patrick Tonyn, governor of East Florida, to Gerald Byrne who sought to travel to Savannah to settle his affairs and prepare his family for removal from Georgia.

On Apr. 15, 1783, the grand jury of Liberty County resolved to support the actions of the executive and legislature of their state.

A proclamation issued by Nathan Brownson on Aug. 24, 1784, required all citizens of Georgia who were in other states to return to their homes or to pay higher taxes on their property.

Orders and proceedings of the executive council were recorded by George Handley, secretary to the council. The minutes cover the period from Jan. 19 to May 18, 1786. They relate principally to the decision to move the seat of government from Savannah to Augusta, but other routine matters are also discussed. A second group of minutes dates from Oct. 23 to Nov. 23, 1786, and concerns financial affairs and correspondence brought before the council.

James Gunn and Thomas Glasock sought title to land in Georgia despite a constitutional amendment negating their rights to this land. They argued that they could refuse to recognize this amendment and retain their rights

The hand-drawn and hand-painted map is of "Cedar Grove," the plantation of A. Abraham in Chatham County between St. Augustine and Landing creeks. Not only does the map show the location of the plantation, but it also indicates how the land was utilized. Furthermore, it carries a drawing of Abraham's residence, two outbuildings, and the surrounding trees.

Miscellaneous Records

1790-1881
Sketch

This set is composed almost entirely of legal documents from Franklin County, Georgia, with a very few from Habersham and Hart counties.

The indentures include land deeds and grants, warrents, promissory notes, accounts, receipts, tax in kind assessments, and surveyors' plats. There are several letters, all from various people and dealing with matters of personal business.

Franklin County, Georgia      -2-      Sketch

The chief value of these papers lies in the fact that they give a fairly detailed picture of price levels - both land and commodity - for a period of almost a hundred years, in a single locality. They also record transfers of land during the early years of Georgia.

There are a number of documents relating to the administration of estates in Franklin County, particularly the estates of Thomas Green and James O. King.

Georgia, Greene County. Papers and Court Records. 1785-1900.

Some of the Greene County Records were transcribed early in the nineteenth century. For example, Book A, 1785-1787, was copied before Oct. 20, 1814, when it was transcribed and examined. Other volumes are likewise marked, but they are not dated. The originals of these volumes may be in Georgia.

As many volumes have lost their covers, it is impossible to state how many of them were transcribed. There are partial indices in Box 14.

The unbound papers include summonses, subpoenas, affidavits, appeals, warrants, executive orders, inventories of estates, several letters, bills and receipts, two wills, and interrogatories to be used for exhibits in obtaining affidavits. There are also requisitions from other counties and states. These papers are mainly routine legal papers but include: incomplete tax returns for 1798; papers concerning a case over the will of William Dodson in 1805; a copy of a 1788 inventory of the estate of William Anderson,

This Sentence Register, 1869-1881, was kept by an official or officials of the courts or of a law enforcement agency in Savannah, Georgia. The identity of the office of origin remains unknown.

The lists of prisoners in this Sentence Register were kept in several different ways, but the information usually included: names of whites; names of blacks; by whom sentenced;

expirations of terms of sentences; fines; and costs. The nature of the crimes was not specified. In any one year several judges were involved in the sentencing, but local judges seem to predominate. For example, during 1880 the mayor and Judge William D. Harden of the city court issued the majority of the sentences. Sentencing to the chain gang constitutes part of the listings. Some of the prisoners were sent to the penitentiary.

Each page in this register records testimony at the Clerk's Office of the Richmond County Superior Court of slaveowners who swore that the slaves listed were imported solely for the purpose of service and labor. This register is a valuable genealogical source since slaves are listed by name and age, and sometimes occupation and some physical characteristics are included.

Sketch

A miscellaneous collection which contains deeds, 1855 and 1856, for land sold by the University through President Alonzo Church to Asbury Hull. A copy of a letter by Pres. Moses Waddel, May 10, 1800, to George Jones of Savannah speaks of the scholastic progress of Jones' son (Noble Wimberly ?), and of Columbia County in that day. A list of the University presidents, 1802-1829, is included.
